THE THREE SOVEREIGNS. The following anecdote has often been told by the Emperor Alexander and is amongst the traditions of the Russian Court:-In 1814, during the period that the allies were masters of Paris, the Czar, who resided in the hotel of M. de Talleyrand, was in the daily habit of taking a walk (in strict incognito) every morning in the gardens of the Tuileries; and turning arm-in-arm to breakfast in the Rue St. Florentine, when on their way thither. they encountered a provincial, evidently freshly imported to Paris, & who had lost his me which is the Tuileries?" "Yes," replied Alexander, "follow us, we are going that way and will show you." The countryman and they were soon in conversation. SINGULAR PLEDGE .- A young woman went delphia, the other day with a basket containing a quantity of china, which she wished to pledge with "mine uncle," for two dollars. After examining the contents of the basket, he gravely stated he could only advance the 3 o'clock. half of that sum. In reply to his statement she said she was a servant, and that the articles were the property of her mistress, whom she would require to consult before taking the money. She left the office for that purpose, and in a short time returned with the basket, saying that her mistress would take what was offered. The pawnbroker again glanced into the depository of the precious ware and saw that it apparently contained the same goods that he formerly examined. The cash was then paid to the woman, who immediately left the shop, and the case was then carefully set aside. In a he again examined, and in which to bis utter astonishment, he found a fine child carefully wrapped up in flannel, and over which a slight covering of china had been ingeniously placed for the purpose of deception. The pawnbroker it is said, applied to the authorities for a nurse to the little pledge, but was told, that like other pledges, he was bound to keep it for twelve months; and if not redeemed at the end of that time, to
