YANKEE YET.

Give us a Yankee yet for all sorts of tricks upon travellers. A short time ago, as merry a set as ever got into a company, were passengers together in a stage coach from Wheeling to Cincinnati. Despite the times, their mirth knew hardly any bounds, till checked at meal time, which came very regularly three times a day, by having to pay fifty cents for that which clearly wasn't worth half the price. Jonathan, especially, became indignant at the imposition, and, warming up with the rebellious spirit which induced his ancestors to cast the tea into Boston Harbor, determined he wouldn't submit to it any longer.

"It's a regular custom, on the whole line," said a stage agent, who had gotten in a half hour before the rebellion reached its height. "Custom or no custom," replied Jonathan, "it's not right, and shouldn't be tolerated. A man may travel along here on horse-back and get his meals for twenty-five cents, at the same table with stage passengers, who are charged double that price; and this because the latter have to pay, not only what they eat themselves, but also for the keeping of the stage horses! I understand that trick," continued the Yankee, with a knowing wink to his companions, "and I'll counter trick it. You've heard of diamond before, perhaps, and you'll hear of it again."

With much more talk like this, they rolled along over the pike, till they reached the edge of S., that pleasantest of all villages in Ohio. Here Jonathan made pretence of having business, got out, assuring his fellow travellers, that he would be at the tavern in time to take dinner with them. The supposition was general, that he had gone to the house of some acquaintance to save his money, and not a few remarks were made at his expense, but when the dinner bell rang, the first at the table was he, and the last to leave it. Having made a hearty meal—for mine host of the Buckeye sets a good table—he rose, and walked into the bar room just as his companions were paying their bills—fifty cents each.

"And so landlord," said he, "you won't take seventy-five dollars for the fifty we were looking at in the stable?"
"No—nothing less than a round hundred will buy her."
"Well, no harm done. What's to pay for dinner and horse feed?"
"Three bits."
"Three bits, eh! Is that the customary price?"
"Yes, sir; twenty five cents for dinner and 12 1/2 for horse feed."

"Yes, sir, that's custom."
"Well custom's law where I came from. But one musn't pay till he's had the things, must he?"
"No," said the landlord, growing impatient, "and wondering what all the stage coach passengers were grinning about."
"So I supposed. Well here's twenty five cents for my dinner, and next time I come this way I'll fetch my horse, and pay the other twelve and a-half for his."

"Stage waiting," shouted the driver. All bounced in, cracking their sides with laughter—slam bang went the coach door—crack went the whip—and away dashed the whole concern.

The way in which the cute Yankee did that Buckeye landlord made him the lion of the company for the remainder of the journey.

ROSES AND THORNS.

Roses and Thorns! an emblem of our path through life. With some the roses enameled the ground, wherever their footsteps tread; with others, the thorns rise up at every turn wounding and entangling them in an inextricable maze. Much of man's unhappiness arises from a false estimate of human life. He promises himself that which is unattainable, and then mourns because he cannot attain it. Not but there are some, who, it would seem, were born to adversity; from whose lips the cup of pleasure, if ever lifted, has been dashed in an instant. To such, the only consolation will be an approving conscience, hope and resignation. Those with whom the roses abound, will do well to gather them while they may; while others who complain of the thorns, may partially extract them by cheerfulness and contentment. It is as unreasonable, to expect Summer without Winter as Roses without Thorns.

As a gentleman was passing a ragged little urchin of about ten years of age, he looked down, and saw a "long nine" in the boy's mouth. "This struck him as being a little rare, and he addressed him thus:
"My son, does your anxious mother know you're out?"
"Certainly," replied the little rascal, "she gave me three cents to buy a long tailed monkey—are you for sale?" This let the gentleman out.

WHAT CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED BY BRAVERY.

The Nantucket Islander tells the following story which shows what can be accomplished by faithfulness and determination on the part of their officers, in keeping down a large hostile force with small physical means.

"In the month February of 1799, the French frigate l'Insurgente was captured by the American frigate Constellation. The Insurgente struck at half past three in the afternoon and a prize crew was placed on board of her, consisting of Mr. Rodgers, the first lieutenant of the Constellation, and since well known as Com. Rodgers; Mr. Porter, afterwards the distinguished commander of the Essex, and eleven seamen. They commenced removing the prisoners, but before they had half completed their important task, the wind and darkness compelled them to defer the duty. The ships were separated, and there remained on board the Insurgente, 173 of her crew, to control whom there were but thirteen Americans. What made this a matter of greater difficulty, was that the Insurgente had been greatly damaged in the action, and that the wounded and dead covered her decks. A disposition to rise upon the prize crew was manifested by the prisoners.—Neither gratings nor handcuffs could be found.—A situation like this called for energetic measures. The prisoners were ordered into the lower hold, the arms were secured, and a sentinel was placed at each hatchway, armed to the teeth, with positive orders to shoot every man who should attempt to appear on deck, without permission. In this awful situation, Mr. Rodgers and his party continued three days, unable to sleep, compelled to manage a frigate, and watch their prisoners, with the utmost vigilance, as the latter was constantly on the look out for an opportunity to retake the ship. At the end of that time, they carried the Insurgente, in triumph into St. Kitts, where they found that the Constellation had already arrived."

BURNING OF MOSCOW.

The French entered into a deserted city. Only the vilest of its population remained. Swarming over its innumerable streets, they began to plunder its churches, and bazaars, and magnificent palaces. But when the night came on, and the meaneast soldier lay down wrapped in the costliest furs and drunk with the richest wines, the cry of "Fire!" "Fire!" burst like a knell of death upon the ranks. The flames shot upward, and their lurid light revealed a figure in the windows of the Kremlin palace. It was the Corsican! His hand grasped a pen, and he was writing by the light; and could any one have looked over him, he would have beheld a letter indited to the Czar, and on its page was written "Peace!" The flames were extinguished; but the next night they broke out in all quarters, spreading with such rapid progress that they involved at the same time the abodes of poverty and sumptuous; a acres; monuments and miracles of luxury and art! The very tombs were burnt up! In the midst of all, the equinoctial storm arose, and raised the ocean of fire into great billows which rolled and dashed against the Kremlin, and would not retreat at the bidding of him who stood upon the ramparts. In the midst of the howling of the storm and cracking of the flames, the fall of combustible magazines, the rolling of drums, and the sound of tocsins, the solemn peal of bells, and clocks striking their last hour, the revelry of the drunken and the shrieks of anguish, and all other sounds of a wild, exulting spectacle, were seen running through the street, the most squalid wretches that ever assumed the form of humanity; men and women, with dishevelled hair, with torches in their hands, and the aspect of demons, revelling in their own Pandemonium. Napoleon dashed out of the town on his charger, beneath the overarching columns of flame, and retired a league distant, where the heat of the fire pursued him. "Oh!" exclaimed he when he afterwards described the scene at St Helena, "it was the grandest, the most awful, the most sublime spectacle which the world ever beheld."

"DISEASE A UNIT
Impurity of the BLOOD the only Disease.
HOW simple, yet how wise, how good and beautiful are all the laws of nature! Simplicity and truth are stamped upon every law of the creation—the mighty worlds which roll in space in every degree of velocity and direction are all governed by attraction of matter to matter. This principle governs the human body. Brandreth's Vegetable Universal Pills, attract all impurities of the blood to the bowels, which organ expels them from the body. Attraction and disease are both units. All accidents or infections only affect the body in proportion as they occasion impurity of the blood.
The bowels for instance are constive—this most important organ in closed—the consequences is a great accumulation of impurities, which, as they cannot get out by their usual passage, are forced into the blood, occasioning impurity of blood. Thus Fevers, Chills, Rheumatism, Coughs, and Colds are often produced. But let Brandreth's Pills be used in such doses as will effectually evacuate the bowels, and health is restored at once.
The unworthy have counterfeited the Doctor's Medicine so extensively, that his travelling Agent is now taking in all the old boxes, and putting new ones of a different figure, with 25 Pills in their place. Some are just received at WILLIAM PECK'S Office.
