BANKRUPT LAWS—Mr. VAN BUREN.

On looking over the "Register of Congressional Debates," the other day, we saw some queer things—considering. On Dec. 8, 1826, Mr. Hayne introduced in the Senate, "A Bill to establish a uniform system of Bankruptcy throughout the United States." Mr. Van Buren was then in the Senate, and frequently took part in the discussion of the Bill, which was continued at intervals for more than two months. The 93d Section extended the provisions of the Act to farmers, planters and mechanics. Mr. Van Buren said—(see Reg. Deb. p. 226–7,) "that his situation and sentiments imposed upon him the duty of expressing himself on this subject. He had always been in favor of a Bankrupt system, including merchants and traders only; and he had abandoned all hope of a Bankrupt Bill, if it were to extend to those classes of persons included in the 93d Section. He had, during the late discussion, directed his efforts against the 93d Section," &c.

Another position taken by Mr. V. B. was still more surprising—considering that one of his objections to the late Bankrupt law, was, that it did not include Banks and other State Corporations. We copy from Reg. Deb. p. 286, from Mr. V. B.'s remarks:

"It had been said, formerly, and on various occasions, that the States had no right to grant Bank charters, and that the Banking privilege belonged exclusively to the Federal Government. No direct attempt, however, had hitherto been made to deprive the States of that power which they had long exercised unmolested. But now the attempt was to be made, if not in an open and unequivocal manner, at least, in an indirect way, to strip the States of the power of chartering Banks. At any rate, if it were contended that this provision did not go so far, it could not be denied that it interfered in the regulation which State Governments might have adopted for the government of those institutions, which was an odious exercise of power not granted by the Constitution. This amendment has this extent: It directs the States as to the manner in which they shall exercise their sovereignty in this particular, and points out what penalty shall be inflicted in case the charters granted by the States are violated. In fact, it points out what the privileges granted to the incorporations shall be, by dictating the forfeiture, and directing what the companies may, and what they may not do. All this has hitherto been done by the States. They have assumed the direction of these matters as a right, which they doubtless have. And in including this subject of corporations in the bill now before the Senate, it will be taken entirely from the States and subjected to the power of the Bankrupt system. This was never done, and never attempted in any country on the face of the globe. In England, such a provision was never dreamed of—nor did he believe that, when the Constitution was framed, such an attribute was imagined by those who authorized the establishment of a Bankrupt system. He did not accede to the opinion, that the system had power over all chartered institutions. By the very nature of their association, they were, in some respects, exempted from its operation, and no such power was ever contemplated, or was, at this moment, under the most extended construction, enjoyed by the General Government."

He then states forcibly several reasons why Banks should not be included, and after some sour and puzzling queries, closes his speech thus:

"He thought that no great expenditure of reasoning need be made, to show the true answers to these inquiries, and the very questions, he conceived, illustrated the difficulties of the case. His idea of a Bankrupt system was, that it could not be applied to any but individuals or principals, and that it was not capable of being made to operate on associations or subordinate agents, either of individuals or corporations. He therefore objected to this amendment. He did not wish the bill to be defaced by any inappropriate provision. He had said, and would say now, that, although he was not so sanguine as some others in his anticipation of the benefits likely to result from the passage of this bill, still he wished it, if it should pass, to go from the hands of the Senate as perfect as possible, and unencumbered with such obstacles to its beneficial operation as would be found in this amendment."

So that in 1827, Mr. Van Buren was in favor of a Bankrupt law, provided its provisions were confined to Merchants and Traders—not allowing voluntary Bankruptcy to Planters, Farmers and Mechanics—nor compulsory Bankruptcy to Banks and other incorporations. Ah! but times have changed!

Trust Sale
OF VALUABLE LAND AND SLAVES.

BY virtue of a deed of trust executed to me by Lemuel M. Morgan, on the 13th March, 1842, duly recorded and registered, I will proceed to sell to the highest bidder, on the premises, on Friday the 7th of June next, (the day after the annual commencement of the University,) the valuable Tract of Land on which the said Lemuel M. Morgan now resides, containing nine hundred and thirty five acres, more or less. There is no difficulty in pronouncing this to be among the most fertile and valuable tracts of land in the county of Orange; and there are in the State few residences combining equal advantages of health, beauty of situation, contiguity of good society, and a literary institution of high character. The tract commences within a few hundred yards of the village of Chapel Hill, and includes about four hundred acres of excellent low grounds on Bolden's creek. The Dwelling House is handsomely situated about a mile from the village, and is, together with a good Barn, Kitchen, Dairy and other houses, in a good state of repair.

At the same time and place, and for the same purposes, I will sell a valuable Female Servant, who is an experienced cook, and her two Children.

The terms, which will probably be accommodating at least in part, will be made known on the day of sale. The title is undoubted, but of course I convey as trustee only.

Would it not be well to order direct from the seller himself, in place of depending upon an agent, particularly if that agent is to select for you, thereby lessen the responsibility of the seller, whereas if you leave him to himself he is without excuse.
