

From the Virginia Patriot.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS.

The spite hating sycophancy of democratic editors would disgrace a slave of the Grand Turk. They await the directions of their leaders with all the patience and watchfulness of a spaniel, and their censure or applause is sure to be conformed with the most scrupulous exactness to the impulse given them from headquarters.

A striking instance of this despicable obsequiousness has very recently been exhibited, in their conduct respecting the letter of Cadore to our Ministers. When it first appeared, although their ranks were somewhat in confusion for want of time to receive their instructions, yet they all stoutly set about either to excuse or to defend it. Some of them plausibly declared it was a forgery and declaimed with the energy of offended patriotism against the presumption of English politicians for daring to manufacture such a production, and against the depravity of federal editors for attempting to make the people believe it genuine. Others, with still greater boldness, admitted its authenticity, praised its fine, free, manly style, and affected to see nothing exceptional in its contents.

They presumed, undoubtedly, that this method of proceeding would be altogether in unison with the wishes and expectations of their leaders, from whom they had been in a habit of learning to excuse or to deny all the outrages of France. But it so happened that they were, for once, mistaken. Napoleon, in the plenitude of his insolence, had himself caused the letter to be made public, and as this step rendered its concealment from the American people altogether impracticable, our government suddenly found themselves under the necessity of shifting their usual ground of acknowledging the authenticity of the letter, and rebuking the sentiments it avowed. As soon as the signal for this purpose was given in the National Intelligencer, it was really amusing to see the scramble among the democratic editors who should be first and warmest in obeying the example—they all, with one accord, admitted the letter to be genuine—it was a most wicked, nasty letter, to be sure, and positively our government must and would do something to resent it.

Such is the conduct of men who claim a title to independence & patriotism, and who would have us receive their dictates as the gospel of our political creed. How such a conduct is calculated to mislead the minds of the people of these United States look up for information and direction.

A CURIOSITY.

The Jacobin prints are not contented with excusing Napoleon's political aims, but they must undertake the Herculean task of palliating his moral enormities likewise. A long article intended for this purpose appeared in a late Raleigh Register; in which the writer attempts to justify the Corsican for his divorce of Josephine, by proving that Henry the VIII. of England divorced his wife also!!!

If this is the way that counsellors are to be justified, they may do what they please—their flatterers will always be able to find some precedent for their enormities. But there was another object besides the exculpation of Napoleon to be derived from this parallel—it afforded a chance for a few reflections against England, and any opportunity for doing that was not to be despised.—No wonder that Napoleon, through his prime minister, should tell us that we are devoid of national spirit and honor, when he daily finds men listened to and applauded amongst us, whose sole delight and almost only occupation it is to defend his injustice and palliate his crimes.

DARKER AND DARKER TIMES.

Yesterday we published extracts from the Aurora, affirming among other articles of intelligence, the exclusion of our commerce from the ports of the northern powers of Europe, and the adoption of the plan of seizure as contained in Cadore's letter, which is said to have been followed as their model. Though the editor of that paper, affects to speak from his foreign sources of information, it is probable that his statements though couched in this manner, were derived from Washington. Be this suggesting, however well or ill founded, his details accord with official information in possession of the executive. Even Russia has so far humiliated herself as a colonial vassal, that Mr. Adams has been explicitly told, in answer to his enquiry how far American property would be safe in the ports of the Russia, that if France required it to be sequestered, her wishes would unavoidably be complied with.

There is no reasonable doubt, that Denmark has actually received the American property, sent there since the repeal of the embargo, though we have no very direct intelligence of the fact. Beside the decisive information passed by the executive to which the Aurora alludes, repecting her present statements, the latest letters from England represent the extreme probability of the measure being realized.

The intrigues of Burr, directed towards Louisiana, will have met with a favourable reception from France who will regard the footing she may gain there with his aid, as a convenient means of approaching Mexico. Without meaning to disparage the old Spanish and French colonists of Louisiana or all of the late adventures, we may say, with truth, that Louisiana contains a mass of excitable matter, every way fitted for the conjoint projects of Burr and Bonaparte. What with the fugitives for debts and crimes poured upon New Orleans from the Western country, in shoals of moving infantry; the French adventurer drawn thither by the expectations of its being permanently annexed to France as a military colony, before the purchase by the United States; and more recently the migration and ready reception of thousands of the freebooters from Cuba; Burr's former connections; the military character of the loyal inhabitants; the febleness of the military establishments of the United States; all these circumstances produce a strong apprehension, that the popularity of the imperial standard would attract a sufficient number of desperate resistors to overthrow every thing which could promptly be brought to oppose it.

Federal Republic.

A SHORT DIALOGUE.

Between Senator Giles and Mr. G. Mr. G. Thos. Jefferson (late President of the United States) is an intriguing scoundrel, as much so as any other man in the country.

Mr. G. If a federalist were to make such an assertion, I suppose it would make your blood boil.

Mr. G. I have made the assertion and shall not retract it, as I consider the saddle placed on the right horse.

We give the dialogue upon authority of the first respectability.—Fed. Rep.

CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against a notorious swindler and forger, who goes by the name of THOMAS CHIDLEY, and who carries with him, either real or forged papers, of his discharge as Sergeant Major, from his Britannic Majesty's 7th Regiment of Royal Fusiliers, with testimonials of his services wounds and good behaviour.—Chidley is upwards of 6 feet high, dark complexion, dark short hair, about 30 years old, a butcher by trade, is a well looking man, has a scar on his forehead, and a white mark on his cheeks, which he says was by a sword.

The Printers in the several States, are requested to insert this caution, to prevent innocent persons being injured by Chidley, who is more than ordinarily plausible.

TO PRINTERS OF NEWSPAPERS.

THERE will speedily be issued from the press, a "History of printing in America," &c. which among other things will contain an account of all the Newspapers printed in British America, previous to the commencement of the revolution in 1775; and the author wishes to add a list of all the Newspapers printed in the U. States, as well as the British, French and Spanish dominions—on this continent, and in the West Indies, on the first day of January, 1810.

With a view to enable him to complete this list he requests the printers of newspapers, will do him the favor to forward one or two of their papers, addressed to "L. T. Printer, Worcester, Mass." And in order that this intelligence may become generally known, he begs they will give this advertisement one or two insertions in their respective papers, which will be considered as an additional obligation. If such publishers of newspapers, or other gentlemen, as have newspapers printed in British or Spanish America, on the 1st of January, will do him the favor to forward one of each kind, as above, they will render him a very acceptable service. It is intended to insert in the History of Printing, above mentioned, the titles of the papers, the names of the printers, the towns and states in which they are printed, and the periods of their publication, as daily, weekly, &c.

Publishers of Magazines and periodical works other than newspapers, are also requested to favour the author with the title of such publications, the name of the publishers, and an account of the periods when and the places where they are printed.
