Proceedings of Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE
UNITED STATES.

MONDAY, December 2.

THIS day being appointed, by the constitution, for the meeting of the third Congress of the United States, sixty-six members of the House of Representatives, and a quorum of the Senate, assembled in Philadelphia.

The House of Representatives made choice of Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, for speaker; John Beckley, clerk; Joseph Wheaton, sergeant at arms; Gifford Dally, door-keeper, and Thomas Claxton, assistant door-keeper.

The two Houses then sent a joint committee, to wait on the President, and inform him, that they were ready to receive such communications, as he might have to lay before them. The President returned, in answer, that he would meet both houses in the senate chamber, at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

TUESDAY, December 3.

The secretary of the senate, Mr. Oris, informed the house, that the members of the senate were waiting to receive the members of the house of Representatives, in the senate-Chamber, in order to meet the President of the United States; Whereupon the members, preceded by their speaker and Clerk, repaired to the senate-Chamber, Exactly at twelve o'clock the President arrived, accompanied by the secretary of state, the secretary of the Treasury, the secretary at war, and the Attorney-General, &c. and in the presence of a large assemblage of citizens and foreigners, delivered to both houses the following address:

FELLOW-CITIZENS of the SENATE, and of the HOUSE of REPRESENTATIVES,

SINCE the commencement of the term, for which I have been again called into office, no fit occasion has arisen for expressing to my fellow-citizens at large, the deep and respectful sense, which I feel, of the renewed testimony of public approbation. While on the one hand, it awakened my gratitude for all those instances of affectionate partiality, with which I have been honoured by my country; on the other, it could not prevent an earnest wish for that retirement, from which no prevent consideration should ever have torn me. But influenced by the belief, that my conduct would be estimated according to its real motives; and that the people, and the authorities derived from them, would support exertions, having nothing personal for their object, I have obeyed the suffrage which commanded me to resume the executive power; and I humbly implore that being, on whose will the fate of nations depends, to crown with success our mutual endeavours for the general happiness.

As soon as the war in Europe had embraced, those powers, with whom the United States have the most extensive relations, there was reason to apprehend, that our intercourse with them might be interrupted, and our disposition for peace drawn into question, by the suspicions, too often entertained by belligerent nations—It seemed therefore to be my duty, to admonish our citizens of the consequences of a contraband trade, and of hostile acts to any of the parties; and to obtain, by a declaration of the existing legal state of things, an earlier admission of our right to the immunities, belonging to our situation. Under these impressions, the proclamation, which will be laid before you, was issued.

In this posture of affairs, both new and delicate, I resolved to adopt general rules, which should conform to the treaties, and assert the privileges, of the United States—These were reduced into a system which will be communicated to you. Although I have not thought myself at liberty to forbid the sale of the prizes, permitted by our treaty of commerce with France to be brought into our ports, I have not refused to cause them to be restored, when they were taken within the protection of our territory; or by vessels commissioned or equipped in a warlike form within the limits of the United States.

It rests with the wisdom of Congress to correct, improve, or enforce this plan of procedure; and it will probably be found expedient, to extend the legal code, and the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, to many cases which though dependent on principles already recognized, demand some further provisions.

When individuals shall, within the United,
