THOMAS PITT IRVING,

Of CHATHAM,

RESPECTFULLY informs the citizens of Bertie, and the circumjacent counties, that he has lately opened a GRAMMAR SCHOOL, in the town of Windsor, where young gentlemen may be instructed in the principles of the Grecian and Roman Languages, upon as reasonable terms as in any part of the union. He deems it unnecessary, if not repugnant to the character of modesty, in a public advertisement, to insert a pompous detail of his own qualifications, but hopes it will suffice to say, that he has epistolary recommendations from some of the most celebrated literary characters in the United States.

Such gentlemen as may think proper to favour him with the tutorage of their sons, may rely upon his uniform and undiscriminating attention to their intellectual improvement.

PARIS, June 8.

Things in themselves the most trivial, become of importance in such a situation as ours. The Municipality came to a resolution that no person should be obliged to take any notice of the procession of the Host, and that no public force should be called out to attend it. This resolution, which left every man to do as he pleased, was represented as an intentional insult to the Catholic worship; and notwithstanding a heavy rain, the ceremony was yesterday more pompously celebrated, great numbers of the troops of the line and national guards attending, than if no such resolution had been passed.

The arrival of M. d'Orleans at Valenciennes having been made a pretext for circulating a report among the troops, that the greater part of their officers meant to quit the service, Marshal Luckner gave out in general orders, that he should consider all reports tending to produce jealousy and disunion in the army as a personal injury to himself—and that he knew of but one party—the glory of France, and the maintenance of her constitution.

The Secretary for foreign affairs, named Dumourier, threatened the world with a resignation, when it was in agitation to bring him to account for the six millions paid into his hands for secret purposes, such as fomenting discord and revolt in the neighbouring countries. But when, through the interference of his good friends, it was decreed that he might do what he pleased with the inconsiderable sum, he condescended to remain in office for the good of his country.

Every time M. Chabot comes about with his impeaching budget, the ears of the auditory are wounded by indecent impressions, scandalous reports and criminal defamation, which, in the reign of the law, would have brought down condign punishment on the head of him who would have dared to use them. On Monday he accused almost all the honest men in the kingdom—his proofs, as he modestly called the insignificant string of evidence he adduced, were chiefly collected from anonymous letters, the information of servants discharged from respectable families, for various misdemeanors; drunken coachmen, and lazy footmen—he denounced The Gazette Universelle as a dangerous libel; (because it never stimulates to murder, or insurrection) he accused la Fayette, Rochambeau, and the deceased General Dillor, as friends to a Counter-Revolution, &c.
