COLORED CONVENTION. The colored convention which meets Louisville, Kentucky, has been led for a good purpose, and we hope see the Old North State fully repreated. We hope the state convention, sich has been called, will select its ry best and most representative coled men, who should attend the conmion and labor (as they can) for the oral and intellectual elevation of the lored people of this country.

DIVIDING THE COLORED VOTE.

It is so very important, and obvious, hen once seen, that we wish to make lithe poor white men in this country perceive that their own toffuence and consequence as electors cease when the negro is seduced from his political inlegaty and persuaded to vote from renal motives. On the day that the egro learns to vote for pay, on that at the rich men, and especially the reat land-owners, will be the only al mers of this country, and we will are the wers! form of an aristocracy, p built on money and the destruction plitical virtue. When the great inford can buy his tenants, and the set merchant the town laborers of be colored people, the "poor white ash" will be no longer consulted. It icksome enough to do so now, and sher pockets to sweep the field by head of their own class and the cerale and dependent of the whites the balance of the latter will pretty soon miss that shaking of the hands and condescenting solicitude as to their opinions which has been termed "electioncering" in the past. In the monarchy of Great Britain the people threatened a revolution to shelsh the enormity of the "procket minghs, by which the great landed were each enabled to bribe or nce, their tenants to return such as her said of the numerous members of parliament who owed their seats to the twe of these haughty dords. When be latter registed the genuine British in the aroused and mighty people, mered a roar which so scared even soulold William the Fourth that he consented even to the creation of more pers from the ranks of the people if beessary to carry the REFORM BILL that the elequence of Russell and Grey prevailed over aristocratic exclusiveness and lust of power, and the montrous abuse was remedied. Shall we, a a beasted land of Republican freeom and progress turn back the clock ages, and inaugurate a political subservience to wealth which even a kingly correment had to relinquish.

The Fair of the Fruit Grower's Association closed on Thursday night cents. last, and by Friday morning, at 10 o'clock, there was but little remaining of the splendid exhibition that had gladdened the eyes, cheered the hearts and watered the mouths of so many hundreds of people. The exhibition was indeed a most magnificent success, and given up as such by all who witnessed it. We have already alluded in terms of favor to the very creditable displays of the most prominent exhibitors, among which the most notable was that of Mr. M. T. It will be one of the features of the grand exhibition Elizabeth Warren distanced all competitors, though there were others who made very fine displays. Her collection of home-made candies, in great variety, and tempting to look upon, filled a large show case some twelve or fifteen feet in length, and attracted a large share of the attention of the assemblage that thronged the hall during the Fair and elicited favorable comments of every one. This candy was all made by herself in two days. The display certainly reflected credit upon her energy and enterprise, as well as that of her son, who assists in the management of her fast increasing in behalf of the exhibition. Their private business was sacrificed for the time being, and nearly their whole time and attentention was devoted to the work of preparation so necessary to the success of the Fair. In their efforts to this end they were nobly seconded by Hon. Edward D. Hall, Mayor of the city, to whose zeal, forethought and energy much of the great success of this new and important association, at its second annual meeting, has been due. It was through his efforts that Capt. Paddison, the President of the Association, was first induced to interest himself particularly and to use his influence with the large proportion of western members in getting their consent to having their second annual Fair at this place; and when this was accomplished he went to work with a zeal that knew no

We are glad to know that our vi tors from a distance were delighted at the reception they received and the attention which they elicited from the managers of the Fair.

It is hoped that the success of this, the first annual Fair of the Fruit Grower's Association held in this city, may induce the officers find members, at their annual meeting in October to determine upon having their next one here. If they should conclude to do so, they can rest assured of a cordial welwhich sithii exceed them for the procompleteness even that which greeted them this year.
