ATTEMPTED BURGLARY AND MURDER—On Saturday night last, two negroes attempted to break into the private market house of Mr. Farrington, near the Atlantic and N. C. Depot. This not having been the first attempt of the kind, a clerk of Mr. Farrington, named Dixon was on the alert. On hearing the alarm, Mr. Dixon rushed out, revolver in hand, and attempted, rather unwisely we think, to capture the thieves instead of killing them. The result was, the negroes succeeded in wresting the pistol from him and one of them shot him through the breast, inflicting a very dangerous, if not a fatal wound. We regret to add that both the negro miscreants succeeded in making their escape.

heive? That depends upon us—the people North and South.
But, seeing that we are so united, can anything be gained, materially or socially, by the attempt to injure, or oppress, or afflict, or humiliate any section? The South is part of the Union, whether we will, whether we will not. Suppose it should be assumed, as northern radicals assume, that the South was totally and constantly wrong. Because the foot has stumbled, shall the hand and main it forever? Will that help the hand? Every obstacle to the rapid replacement of the South upon the basis of a progressive prosperity, must react upon the healthful progress of the North, and thus of the whole country. The South has little more to lose, and can hardly be further injured. She has much to gain, and so long as she is kept from gaining it the whole country must suffer. Every northern man, therefore, who in any way seeks to degrade the South, is laboring to degrade his own section and himself.

things in death; and hath thus bound the world together in the blood of His love.
It is reported that General Canby has decided in favor of John T. Monroe, Mayor-elect of New Orleans, and that the latter will assume his office.
DIED.
In this city, this (Tuesday) morning, at 3 o'clock, of small pox, Mr. J. O. SHOOK.
Mr. Shook was a printer, recently from Wilmington. At the commencement of his sickness he was employed in the composing room of the Newborn Times. Possessing qualities of a character calculated to endure him to a large circle of acquaintances, the news of his death will carry sadness to the hearts wherever they may be. His numerous friends in this city and Wilmington will read this notice with sincere sorrow.

THE VETO MESSAGE.—We lay before our readers to day, the message of President Johnson, vetoing the "Civil Rights" bill. We will add no single word of comment. The document will be universally read, and will therefore bear its own contents.
[From the Watchman.]
South and North.
So near the conclusion of a strife so terrific as the late war in this country, it may be perilous to write anything which favors either to the sections that have been parties to the conflict. And yet, every public man feels that it is necessary that such be done, and something be said. In our position, making the experiment of a journal to be suited to all parts of the country, and to every class of people in it, it might be worldly wise to abstain from this whole subject, and to discuss general themes which touch no man's feelings.
But that would be cowardly—that would be selfish—that would be mean. And independent journalists, bound to no party, dictated to by no sect, owing no man anything in this matter but to love him Christianly; neutral in nothing, honest in all things, we shall, "without fear or favor," but not without "affection," turn our heart inside out to our readers.
Southern to the last drop of our blood, we did all we could for the Confederacy while it lasted, and because we were southern, we did what we could to avert the facts which made the Confederacy. We did all we could, in our humble way, with people North and South, before the war, to prevent the dissolution of the Union. When that event took place, we did all we could, as we believed in duty bound, and taught by Providence, to make the Confederacy a success. And this we did, without, as we believe, one single throb of hatred toward an individual engaged in that terrible, tragic moment of history. We did our duty modestly, and fearlessly, and faithfully, and have nothing thereof to regret.
Knowing our own purity of intention, it seems to us that it might be narrow and weak and uncharitable in us to suppose that there were no men on the other side quite as honest and true-hearted as we believe ourselves to have been.
We have never hated the North or the northern people, while the principles of very many of them have been very odious to us. We have always loved the South and the southern people, while many things in some of them have not seemed beautiful or good to us.
The war of words and guns has closed. What shall the southern people do? What shall the northern people do? Is forgiveness never to come? Is wrath to be nursed forever? Will such a state of affairs promote the cause of liberty, progress, civilization, and religion? Can we not, on both sides, take some calm moments for thought—for self-searching—for a consideration of the future, which is to be nearer to our children than to ourselves? Let men who have any influence in neighborhoods, or districts, or states, or in the nation, hush the tumultuous voices of their passions, and hear the calm ones of reason.
What more should the people of the North want with the people of the South? The former have been victorious. Now let them recollect that it is as true of nations as of individuals—"He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." Is it not enough that the pride of the South has sustained the prodigious shock of the late failure? Is it not enough that her people have been impoverished? Is it not enough that, having had their cause taken into the court of arms, the defendant has been utterly cast into the suit, with heavy costs of blood and treasure? Now, on simple grounds of self-love, should not the North do all practicable things to heal the South? Leaving out of view all questions of morality and generosity, look at it purely as a question of high policy. The North and South cannot be separated. The former tried it after a skillful fashion, and failed. The latter tried it in bloodiest earnest, and failed. Neither diplomacy nor the sword has been able to divorce or dissever us. Providence has seemed to fix these states in adhesive unity. Shall it be co-

On the other hand, suppose it to be assumed, as Southern radicals assume, that the North has been totally and constantly wrong; that there is none good, no, not one, in all the North; that no forgiveness must come to any one who live in a land from which went out the hordes that pillaged, despoiled and ravaged us; that no dealings must be between the Jews and Samaritans forever; that we must "sit down in the ashes and growl over our misfortunes;" that we be instant, in season and out of season, to let the "Yankee" see our contempt of him! Shall we thereby grow richer and stronger, not to say more wholesome in our tempers, and more lovely in our lives?
There seem to us to be very plain and easy answers to all these and kindred questions. And we think the right answers will come, if we let reason and righteousness lead us in the ways of peace and prosperity.
We shall not say, in explicit terms, what we think these answers are, but we shall say that, by the grace of Providence, in this hour of victory on one side and defeat on the other, there are vouchsafed to us great examples of heroic forbearance and good behavior.
From all debates and controversies and heart burnings, we beg humbly to call all our citizens to contemplate calmly the course of Andrew Johnson and Robert E. Lee—of Ulysses S. Grant and Joseph E. Johnston. Can there be round, north or south, any vengeful citizens who could more easily find excuses for rancor, resentment, and hate than the four men whose names the muse of history is gravating on the walls of her Wall-hall, while we pencil them in this simple article.
Andrew Johnson was hated and hunted with all the ferocity of partisan fierceness as a traitor to his people, and to base a wretch to live.
Robert E. Lee was maligned and cursed, and for weary years watched and toiled, and lay in camps and on the bare ground, lacking the common necessities of life, while his beautiful home and pleasant places of his heart were despoiled and ravaged.
Ulysses S. Grant has for years lain under the load of ignominy which one section heaped upon him as its destroyer, and the load of enormous responsibility which the other section placed upon his shoulders, because of the war.
Joseph E. Johnston by reason of this war, has shared all the hard fortunes which the black fates heaped on Lee.
But now that the war has ended, these heroic men do not conduct themselves like pettish and fretful children. No little passions rule them. When Abraham Lincoln perished by an assassination which the whole South regarded with horror, it was expected that Mr. Johnson would wreak his wrath on the whole South indiscriminately, while he would specially press to the lips of his persecutors the chalice they had so freely filled with poison for him. God be thanked! He has done no such foolish and no such wicked thing. He has quietly addressed himself to his official duties, with firmness no bribes could weaken and no threats could shake. Robert E. Lee wrapped all his passions round his sword when he gave it to his victorious foe; and then quietly went to the discharge of the duties of the office of teacher of the humanities.—And so of our other two distinguished fellow-citizens.
And now, is there any man at the North who has any more reason to keep up a perpetual war upon the South than Andrew Johnson? And is there any man at the South who has more to forgive the North than Robert E. Lee.
Let us study these wonderful men. Let us thank God for the grace He hath given these, His servants, to show the meekness of wisdom and the wisdom of meekness. And let all men, North and South, journalists, orators, legislators, influential individuals, and simple citizens, set themselves steadfastly and earnestly to the imitation of these great models, and Peace shall come—the real radiant Peace; and Love shall follow Peace; and we shall forgive much and shall have much forgiven, and shall be like Him our Lord and Teacher, who bore all things in life, and forgave all
