

AGRICULTURAL.

SEED POTATOES AND FERTILIZERS.

Mr. E. H. Judd, of South Hadley, Mass., in an essay read before the Franklin Harvest Club, said: "After experimenting with most kinds of fertilizers and methods of planting and cultivating the potato, I have solved the problem to my satisfaction. I am confident that the best results can be obtained on the majority of our soils by first plowing, then thoroughly pulverizing and drilling at least five inches deep. Then apply in drill manure of first quality at the rate of five loads per acre, after dropping the seed, in bottom of drill, the manure to be put top of seed, and only leaving one eye on a piece, and putting only one piece in a hill. Having tried different-sized tubers, I am satisfied that the larger the potato you use for seed the greater will be the returns. Two different years I have experimented by cutting my potatoes into pieces, leaving only one eye on a piece, and putting only one piece in a hill, with the following results. In the spring of 1868 I took one bushel of potatoes and cut them into pieces, leaving only one eye on a piece, and planted them one piece in a hill. They went over nearly one third of an acre. The following fall I harvested from that field one hundred and five bushels of merchantable potatoes. I have since tried the experiment of putting in two eyes, but have diminished the yield nearly one third."

PLASTER FOR POTATOES.

According to Mr. Compton, author of the prize essay on the cultivation of the potato, very remarkable results are obtained from plaster by dusting the vines with it as soon as they are through the soil, again immediately after the last plowing and hoeing; and at intervals through the whole growing season. The first application may be light, the second heavier, and after that, more bountiful, say 200 pounds to the acre. It renders the plant less palatable to the insects, and appears to be fatal to many of the fungi family. The vines retain a bright lively green color, and the tubers continue swelling until growth is stopped by the frost; besides, potatoes thus grown are so sound and free from disease as to be easily kept for the spring market, without any loss by rot. Mr. Compton says he has seen a field, all planted with the same variety, at the same time, on one-half of which, that had received no plaster, the yield was but sixty barrels per acre, and many rotten, while the other half to which plaster had been applied, yielded 300 bushels per acre, and not an unsound one among them.

CANNING OF VEGETABLES.—The chemical bath in which the cans of vegetables are immersed before their final sealing is used only for the purpose of getting a temperature higher than the boiling point of water. The necessity for this high temperature is due to the fact that the air contained in the can and its contents is more thoroughly expelled, and if the can is entirely void of air there can be no change in the condition of its contents. A boiling heat will expel all the air, but longer time is needed than with a higher temperature. For domestic purposes the bath of boiling water is sufficient. It is only necessary to cook vegetables (without salt) in the can, to solder the cover on perfectly airtight, to make a pin hole in the cover, and then immerse the can in a boiling water bath without covering the upper parts, and when it has been exposed to the boiling heat for fifteen minutes, to seal with a drop of solder upon the pin hole.

BARREN FIG TREES.—There are a great many fig trees over the State that will bear two or three crops of figs each year, but will drop off when half grown. Nothing will make such trees bear, let them grow where they will, and almost every one who has such trees thinks they cannot be grafted. But they can and should be. Have to graft on the small limbs all over the top of the tree. Will not grow to any off a large limb to graft. The best time to graft the fig is from the first of February to the twenty-fifth. Last March I set some fig grafts on one of my trees; parts of them grew well; more would have grown if I had set them earlier. Some of the grafts grew over four feet. Last fall I picked ripe figs from these grafts; also where the grafts don't grow there will be young shoots growing that can be budded in the summer.—F. Ritter, in Pacific Rural Press.

THE CROPS.—The people of Eastern North Carolina have ample cause to be grateful for the abundant and excellent yield promised in the present year. From every quarter we hear of splendid corn and cotton crops, that are now almost beyond the effect of the usual causes of injury; and the smaller crops—potatoes, peas, &c.—are in abundance, and promise a fine yield. One of the causes of the present distress (the cheapness of the cost of the present crop) will result in an improved condition of affairs in the fall. There have been fewer crops mortgaged, and these for a smaller amount, than at any time since the war; and the farmers, who can safely predict, will, next year, enter upon a season of prosperity not equaled since the war.—New-Berne Times.

HAULING MANURE.—"I am always provoked when I see one man loading a wagon, hauling in a quarter or half a mile, unloading it and returning." I am wroth than that. I am always mad when I see any one hauling out manure and throwing it down in heaps. The true way is to spread the manure from the wagon and spread it evenly on the ground. It is easily done in that way for several reasons. 1. The load is portable, can be moved forward to suit, enabling you to vary the amount put on as circumstances require. 2. There being a good board easier to shovel from, it is much easier to handle it than when lying on the ground. 3. From the elevated position on the wagon it requires only about one half the exertion to do the work that it does from the level of the ground. But the advocates of the heap theory will say, the manure is wasted by being exposed to the sun and air. I have very little faith in such theories. I have hauled manure and spread it in summer and left it until the next spring before the ground was plowed, and never in any life did I see the same amount of manure produce better results.—Rural New Yorker.

DURING HOT WEATHER.—Among a hundred mechanics and laborers working in any part of a city or town, more than one-half of them will be found dressed in dark clothes, and often wearing heavy black hats which would be too warm even for winter in this climate. White, loosely braided straw hats can be bought for next to nothing, and working-men who wear these hats should have the under side of the brim lined with green to keep off the light and heat that is reflected back by paving-stones, white walls, piles of bricks, and beds of mortar. Those who go upon the water should especially take this precaution, as water is a great reflector; but to remove the hat entirely and put a white handkerchief on the head would be better still.
