A Country School Episode.

There was a melancholy occasion at a country school-house near Columbus, Ohio, a few days ago. The school-house is located near the line of a railroad, and a slight collision chanced to occur between two freight trains, in which one car loaded with whiskey was badly wrecked, and several barrels of the liquor tossed out beside the track in a damaged condition. During the nooning the pupils of the school went down to investigate the character of the accident, and discovered the whiskey. They were girls and boys together, and some of the boys proposed that they taste the liquor that was wasting, which suggestion was taken up as a good joke and was complied with. The day was cold and the spirits produced no effect so all the pupils drank of it several times just for fun, and then returned to the school-house. In the warm school room the heat produced the usual effect upon those carrying much whiskey in the stomach, and the school became singularly restless. Suddenly one boy was taken awfully sick. The schoolma'am asked him what ailed him, and he said he was ill, which fact he made painfully apparent by doing what the whale did with Jonah, only he distributed bread and butter and things over the floor instead of prophets. The schoolma'am was full of sympathy, and was doing what she could for the afflicted youth, when another boy was taken even worse. He seemed to have no object in life save to get his boot heels up out of his mouth, and the indications were that he would succeed. Then two of the girls began to cry, and a lot of other girls did the same thing, and the appearance of bread and butter on the floor was enlivened by the addition of the sweatmeats school girls love. By this time every boy in the house was struggling for a supremacy as a producer, and the floor was a sight to behold! Only one little fellow was in condition to tell what the scholars did at noon but when he told of it a great light dawned upon the mind of the troubled schoolma'am. A fleet footed messenger was dispatched for aid, and wagons soon came and carried the limp and exhausted pupils to their several homes. The day will be long remembered in the neighborhood as one when the rising generation was in pain and disgrace.

A Mysterious Letter.

In the Tilton-Beecher case on Wednesday, the following letter from Mrs. Tilton was read by plaintiff's counsel. The New York Herald expresses the opinion that this letter "will stand a large amount of explanation"

July 4th, 1871—My dear Theodore: I had expected you all day yesterday and to-day; but now your letter was put into my hand instead. I feel the bitterest discernments, but we are both in God's hands. While I now hear Him say by my heart's intense yearnings, "Return to the love of thy youth." O my dear husband may you not need the further discipline of being misled by a good woman as I have been by a good man. I rejoice in your happy days and peaceful mind, though I am not in any wise the cause. It will be by God's gift alone if ever your face illumines or heart throbs with thoughts of me. As for me, I will wait on the Lord. I thank you for the sufferings of the past year. You have been my deliverer. Destroy my letters nor show them to our mutual friend. The fear of this will prevent my writing my inmost life. I am your dear wife.
