The cultivation of cotton in California which was tried in that State some time ago, but abandoned in 1877, is now being revived on a large scale under promise of a permanent home market. A thousand acres have already been planted in cotton. It is claimed that the climate, by reason of the even temperature, is eminently fitted for cotton culture and that the staple raised will be of greater fineness and the Californians have grown very enthusiastic, and prophesy that cotton will soon rival wheat and wine in importance in the agriculture of California.

Boyd, a wandering clock tinker. Boyd lately found business discouragingly dull in Kentucky. The bridge across Green River near Munfordsville, is 125 feet high. He advertised in the newspapers that at a certain time, he would drop from that structure into the water below. He said that he cared very little whether he lived or not, and therefore did not mind the risk. On the other hand he would make money by the feat, if it did not kill him. A dispatch from Tucson, Arizona, The railroad company owning the bridge excluded him at first, but at length, so clamorous was the multitude, consented to let him take the hazard. He went down head foremost, and was not hurt.

Whittaker's Ears.

WEST POINT, April 16 .- Commandant Lezelle, of the Corps of Cadets, testified before the Court of Enquiry, in the Whittaker case today, that he made as thorough an investigation as possible of the alleged outrage on Whittaker when it was first reported, but was not able to ascertain who were the perpetrators. He was of the opinion that Whittaker mutilated himself. He thought Whittaker's handwriting resembled that of the so-called note of warning, and that Whittaker could have freed himself from his bonds if he had tried before he was found. The finding of the necktie in his room was also, he thought, against him, because no person in civilian's dress would have brought it there. He said that if there were reasons why others should have committed the outrages to drive Whittaker away, there were equally The following, intended to break as strong reasons why he should had news gently, was sent to the have done it himself to stay, as the widow of a man who had just been witness understood that he was
