From the Courier des Etis Unis. STANITA; A TALE OF MURAT'S TIME.

ed eyebrows and black hair? Juanita had a fall and winter supplies, consisting of heart—an Italian heart—that is saying enough. A large assortment of Foreign and Domestic The hearts of the Neapolitah women partake a little of the fire of their own native Vesuvius. And Juanita loved as a girl loves at fifteen CROCKERY, GLASS and STONEWARE, years, when she enjoys understanding imagination and health. This love has nothing in unison with our cold and correct love of France. which may be learned in a grammar like a dead language. And in the midst of a thousand lovers, Juanita wished to choose one, and, fer choise fell upon the worst subject of the whole Neapolitan kingdom. He however possessed all the requisite qualities to please; he was an easy speaker, a pretty fellow and interesting as a sub-lieutenant in the guards of Murat. Nothing more was necessary in 1810 to turn the head of a young girl. Juanita and Strezo promissed to love each other forever; he, kept his oath twenty-four hours; she remained faithful to death-and what a death! One evening the crowd was violently agitated on the side of the convent of St. Lucia; a dull marmuring sound proceeded from it, and a vague rumorspread the word "assassin!" Juanita, impelled by curiosity, made her way towards the crowd which increased as she proceeded; for next to love, the most active sentiment of a Neapolitan girl is curiosity. She pressed through the dense mass of citizens and lazzoroni, who were looking on with indifference, conversing about the fate of the murdered man, and she arrived before a door, upon the threshhold of which were stationed two police excers-and between them was Strezo with blood upon his neck, for it was he who was the assassin!-The miserable wretch, had not committed the crime through jealousy, as frequently happens in warm countries, where the heat of the sun generates prompt hearts and ardent dispositions -it was for gold! Juanita fell senseless on the bosom of him to whom she had given more than her life. When she was restored, the poor girl found hershelf at her own house, in her pretty little shop, in the midst of flowers and fruits; and the neighbors pitied her, for they knew all -...... They murmured around her-"it is the betrothed of the assassin." Strezo at the same time was stretched out with his legs chained in a dungeon of ten feet by six. His trial was not long-he was condemned to be hung. Juanita visited him every day, for her whole existence was bound up in his, and she knew his death would be followed by her own.

On the day that was fixed for the execution, Juanita embraced Strezzo, throwing around him her arms emaciated by sorrow. As to tears she had none to shed; from the moment of his condemnation, her eye was dry as a spring in summer: Heavy sorrows are mute! Suddenly an idea flashed across her imagination, and the blood rushed quickly to her forefread. She had determined upon dying alone, for she knew that Strezo was more attached to fife than to her. Suddenly stripping off nis garments, she clothed herself with them, and casting her own at his feet, directed him to put them on. "Thou shalt live," said she to him, imprinting a last kiss upon his forehead. Strezzo put on cooly the dress of the young girlit was evening-and he quitted her. The next day the bells of the great square sounded the Rnell of the dying. They came to seek Strezzo but carried away Juanita-a handkerchief held to her face, as if she had been weeping, anabled her to accomplish her sublime sacriice. And when swung off by the executioner, and suspended in the air, she cast upon the gaping crowd which surounded her, her last look an this world; her eye, which was beginning to glaze distinguished Strezzo. He was there! -he!-witnessing her death unmoved! and tranquilly smoking his Spanish cigar! A last convulsion rung the head of Juanita towards him; she then remained motionless and stiff, and all was over. Strezzo lived without remorse to the age of sixty; sometimes in opulence, at others in indigence. At sixty years, being no longer good for anything, he became a beggar. If there still exists any Juanitas, may heaven preserve them from having for lovers such men as Strezzo.

Napoleon and the Child .- I received an invitation from Madame Bonaparte to breakfast at St. Cloud, and to bring my little Josephine. I went alone, because Janot was confined to his bed by indisposition. Napolean, it is well known, never breakfasted with Madame Bonaparte, and never appeared in her room in the morning, except occasionally, when he knew that he should meet some persons there to whom he was desirous of speaking without exeming observation. This morning he came into the room just as we were rising from the breakfast table, and, on advancing towards us, at once descried, in the midst of the group, the charming figure of my little Josephine, with her pretty light hair, curling round a face that beamed ty light hair, curling round a face that beamed the of new white cotton clothes and black fur hat. only eighteen months old. The First Consul, immediately on seeing her, exclaimed, "Ah! ah! here is our god-daughter, the cardinaless! Good morning, ma'amselle, come, look at me; there, open your eyes, Why the devil, do you know that she is prodigiously pretty; the little thing resembles her grandmother; yes, faith, she is very like poor Madame Permon. And what a pretty woman she was; she was really the most beautiful woman I eyer saw." As he was saying this, he pulled the ears and nose of Door in the side, and double Harness, for one or my little girl, who did not approve of it at all; but I had taken the precaution to tell her, that if she did not cry at St. Cloud, we should stop at a toy-shop on our way home, and she should have whatever she liked. Napoleon, who did seal?'s, which he is determined to disnot know this promise, remarked how very good-tempered the child was, while I was secretly reminding her of the toy-shop ten times in a minute. "That is what I like children to he," continued Napoleon, "not perpetually, crying or fretting; there is that little Latitia, who is as beautiful as an angel; well, she cries so violently, that I make my escape as if the Malse was on fire." - Madame Junet's Memoirs. | description, good wages and constant ment will be given. A CA BD. HE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and customers, that in consequence of his determination to spend a few months in New York and Philadelphia, with the view of acquiring a more perfect knowledge of the Tailoring business, it will not, for some time, be in his power to attend to their orders. He will, however, very shortly locate himself permanently in his native town, and resume his profession, which he will conduct on an extensive scale, and, as he hopes, to the entire satisfaction of all who may favor him with their patronage.

RICHARD B. BERRY. Newbern, January 4, 1833.

CAUTION.

HE subscriber was lately warranted by John Slye, of Bay River, Craven County on two accounts presented by said Slye; who, contrary to law and usage, obtained judgments without the knowledge of the subscriber, who had no notice whatever given him to attend trial. As soon, however, as he learned that judgments had been obtained, he applied to the Magistrate who gave them, and requested a new trial, that he might make it appear by testimony, that the claims set forth by Slye were not just, but illegal. A new trial was accordingly granted, and notice given to Slye, and the Constable holding the judgments to attend at the Magistrate's on Saturday last. They did not however attend; and it is doubtless Slye's intention to endeavor to collect the amount of the illegal judgments, or to pass them away. Under these circumstances, the subscriber considers it his duty to caution all persons from trading for said judgments, as he is prepared to contest their recovery in a court of justice.
