SERENADE.

Written for Mozart's Air, "Away with Melancholy," with Madrigal Catalogue variations.—By Mrs. Krumpholtz.

The matin bells are pealing, From tower and turret grey; And fairy steps are stealing O'er beds of breathing bloom, away. Awake from golden slumbers, That claim thee, Love, from me; Let Music's softest numbers Unlock the spell that hangs o'er thee. Oh! fly with me, o'er land and sea, Where zephyrs may rove, and hearts may love— Where nestling sweet, 'mid boughs that meet Of tangled vine, or eglantine, Our cot shall rise 'neath rosetate skies, Where Love, unwatched, may breathe her sighs. My gallant bark is lying Beneath thy lattice, dear; And spicy gales are sighing, To waft thee to Love's rosy sphere— There's freedom on the billow, And music in the wind! Then, Ellen, quit thy pillow, Those silken braids of jet to bind— And fly with me, o'er land and sea, My long denied, my plighted bride: In myrtle shades, and mystic glades, Where Tasso roved, and Petrarch loved; We'll wing away the golden day— Oh! fly with me—away! away!

A PERFECT WIFE.

One of the finest pictures of female character we ever met with, is that given by Edmund Burke of his own wife. The charming daughter of Doct. Nugent was indeed worthy of the greatest orator of modern times, if we are to take the husband's own account of this admirable woman. The description reminds us, in some of its exquisite lineaments, of Sheridan's first wife, whom an English bishop eulogised as 'the connecting link between women and angels.'

Burke's Portrait of his lady is thus introduced by Prior, in his life of that statesman. "Added to affectionate admiration of his talents, Mrs Burke possessed accomplishments, good sense, goodness of heart, and a sweetness of manners and disposition, which served to allay many of the anxieties of his future career, the labours to attain fame and independence, the fretful moments attendant on severe study, the irritations produced by party and political zeal, and the tempestuous passions engendered by constant contention in active parliamentary life. He repeatedly declared that "every care vanished the moment he entered under his own roof." He wrote the following beautiful descriptive paper—the idea of a perfect wife—which he presented to her one morning on the anniversary of their marriage, delicately leading the paper thus:—"The character of—" leaving her to fill up the blank. It is as follows.

THE CHARACTER OF —

"Intend to give my idea of a woman: if it at all answers any original, I shall be pleased; for if such a person as I would describe really exists, she must be far superior to my description; and such as I must love too well to be able to paint as I ought.

"She is handsome, but it is a beauty not arising from features, from complexion, or from shape; she has all three in an high degree, but it is not by these she touches the heart; it is all that sweet ess of temper, benevolence, innocence, and sensibility which a face can express, that forms beauty.

"She has a face that just raises your attention at first sight—it grows on you every moment; and you wonder it did do no more than raise your attention at first.

"Her eyes have a mild light, but they awe you when she pleases; they command like a good man out of office, not by authority, but by virtue.

"Her features are not perfectly regular; that sort of exactness is more to be praised than to be loved; for it is never animated.

"Her stature is not tall; she is made to be the admiration of every person, but the happiness of one.

"She has all the firmness that does not exclude delicacy; she has all the softness that does not imply weakness.

"There is often more of the coquette shown in an affected plainness than in a tawdry fineness. She is always clean without preciseness or affectation. Her gravity is a gentle thoughtfulness, that softens the features without decomposing them; she is usually grave.

"Her smiles are inexpressible.

"Her voice is a low, soft music, not formed to rule in public assemblies, but to charm those who can distinguish a company from a crowd; it has this advantage, you must come close to her to hear it.

"To describe her body describes her mind: one is the transcript of the other. Her understanding is not shown in the variety of matters it exerts itself on, but in the goodness of the choice she makes.

"She does not display it so much in saying or doing striking things, as in avoiding such as she ought not to do.

"She discovers the right and wrong of things not by reasoning, but sagacity; most women and many good ones, have a closeness and something selfish in their dispositions; she has a true generosity of temper; the most extravagant cannot be more unbounded in their liberality, the most covetous not more cautious in the disposition.

"No person of so few years can know the world better; no person was ever less corrupted by that knowledge.

"Her politeness seems to flow rather from a natural disposition to oblige, than from any rules on that subject; and therefore never fails to strike those who understand good breeding, and those who do not.

"She does not run with a girl's eagerness into new friendships, which as they have no foundation in reason, serve only to multiply and embitter disputes; it is long before she chooses, but then it is fixed forever; and the first hours of romantic friendships are not warmer than her's after the lapse of years.

As she never disgraces her good nature by severe reflection on any body, so she never degrades her judgment by in moderate or ill-placed praises, for every thing violent is contrary to her gentleness of disposition and the evenness of her virtue; she has a steady and firm mind, which takes no more from the female character than the solidity of marble does from its polish and lustre.

"She has such virtues as make us value the truly great of our own sex; she has all the winning graces that make us love even the faults we see in the weak and beautiful of her's."

From the New York American.

The English House of Commons is sometimes characterised as an assembly of "the first gentlemen in Europe." As it is now quite the vogue among British travellers to criticise the manners and morals with which a three months' glimpse of the United States renders them quite familiar, it may save our citizens from pining under the sense of being more unmannerly or more immoral than their caricaturists, to show up some pictures of England by English artists. We gave not long ago, as a specimen of the morality of some of the higher classes, an extract from the London Quarterly on the subject of betting at the Newmarket races. We now, in the way of manners, copy a paragraph about the House of Commons. It is from a late London Spectator.

"No assembly of decent mechanics in the country would be guilty of the indecorums which are constantly committed in the House of Commons." The decencies of civilized society appear to be totally disregarded there. A few nights ago, one of our grave legislators amused his brother members by "crowing like a cock;" and there was a regular chorus of scraping, hissing, and shouting, when Mr. Poulett Scrope rose to speak upon a financial subject which he understood, though his audience did not. Colonel Davies might well say that he was ashamed of the behaviour of the House. Sir Robert Peel himself acknowledged that there was "a great deal of talking, incessant buzz, coughing, and very ungraceful attitudes" among the "master spirits of the age," as he sneeringly denominated the members of the first Reformed Parliament. Mr. Warburton declared, that "he was never in the House two hours without undergoing bodily torture."

Dazzling Argument.—"You teach," said the Emperor Trajan to Rabbi Joshua, "that your God is every where, and boast that he resides amongst your nations. I should like to see him." God's presence is indeed every where," replied Joshua, "but he cannot be seen; no mortal eyes can behold his glory." The Emperor insisted. "Well," said Joshua, "suppose we try to look first at one of his ambassadors?" The Emperor consented. The Rabbi took him look at the sun in its meridian splendor. "I cannot," said Trajan; "the light dazzles me." "Thou art unable," said Joshua, "to endure the light of one of his creatures, and canst thou expect to behold the resplendent glory of the Creator! Would not such a sight annihilate thee?"

Projects of Mehemet Ali, Viceroy of Egypt. Egypt, the cradle of the sciences and the arts, is emerging from a long night of Cimmerian darkness. Mehemet Ali, now the independent Sovereign of Egypt and Syria, and some of the Grecian Islands, is resolved to regenerate those countries. He has founded colleges, created manufactories, introduced the arts of Europe, and sent young Egyptians to England, France and Germany, to be educated. He proposes to augment his navy to 20 ships of the line; to make a good road between Cairo and Alexandria; a canal from Suez to the Nile, to transport all his manufactures to Syria, and encourage agriculture alone in Egypt. He proposes to open a communication between the Orontes, which empties itself into the Mediterranean, and the Euphrates, which falls into the Persian Gulf, and to drain the marshes of Alexandria. He intends to make the city of Candia, in the island of that name, a free port, and to establish in Judea a naval arsenal for the large vessels. When peace is completely re-established, he intends making a voyage to Candia and Syria, to personally examine the state of those countries. The consuls of England and France are to accompany him, each in a frigate of his own nation.—[Journal of Smyrna.

The "Somerset Messenger," a clever paper of New Jersey, has picked up the following wonder:—

"Siamese Calves.—An evidence of the freaks which Nature sometimes indulges in may be seen in the bar room of Mr. N. G. Matison, in Amwell township, Hunterdon county. It is that of a calf, or calves with eight legs, two tails, four ears, and nothing but a miniature resemblance of a head. The hind parts are separate—the breast and sides firmly attached to each other."

CHOLERA.—The Columbus, Ohio Monitor of Aug. 8. says:—

Sunday last, like Sunday the 11th inst. was a day of terror and gloominess. Seven persons died between Saturday midnight and Sunday midnight.—No family did we ever see present such a scene of extinction as that of Mr. James S. Whyte.—On Saturday an infant child of Mr. Whyte, died probably with debility of constitution, directly after Mrs. Whyte was taken with the cholera and died on Saturday evening. Mr. Whyte was taken at 10 o'clock of the same evening, and died a few minutes before 6 in the morning. Chauncy Loring, an apprentice to Mr. Whyte, aged probably 19, who attended the funeral of Mr. and Mrs. Whyte, died on Sunday night. To render the desolation more appalling, George Philips on the same town lot, died on Sunday; and on Monday a woman of the name of Shea. There were twelve burials in town on Sunday and Monday.

AUGUSTUS S. EMMETT. Newbern, Sept. 13, 1833.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 12th, 1833.

IN the late conflagration of the Treasury building, nearly all the correspondence of the Secretary of the Treasury, from the establishment of the Department to the 1st March, 1833, was destroyed including, as well the original letters and communications addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the records of the letters and communications written by him. With a view to repair the loss, as far as may be practicable, all officers of the United States, are requested to cause copies to be prepared, and authenticated by them, of any letters (excepting those heretofore alluded to, which they may at any time have written) or received from, the Secretary of the Treasury; and all those who have been in office, and other individuals throughout the United States, are invited to do the same. That this correspondence may be arranged into appropriate books, it is requested that it be copied on folio foolscap paper, with a sufficient margin on all sides to admit of binding, and that no more than one letter be contained on a leaf. It is also requested, that the copies be written in a plain and distinct or engraving hand. Where the original letter can be spared it would be preferred. The reasonable expense incurred in copying the papers now requested, not exceeding the rate of ten cents for every hundred words, will be defrayed by the Department.

The correspondence which has been saved, and of which, therefore, no copies are desired, are the records of the letters written by the Secretary of the Treasury to Presidents and Cashiers of Banks, from the 1st October, 1819, to the 20th February, 1833; all the correspondence relating to Revolutionary claims under the act of 15th May, 1828, and to claims of Virginia officers to half pay, under the act of 6th July, 1832; and to applications for the benefits of the acts of the 20 March, 1831, and 14th July, 1831, for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States. Copies of some circular letters and instructions, written by the Secretary, have also been preserved, and it is requested that, before a copy be made of any circular letter or instruction, written by the Secretary of the Treasury, the date and object of the circular be first stated to the Department, and its wishes on the subject ascertained. LOUIS McLANE, Secretary of the Treasury.

THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES WILL be given for likely young Negroes of both sexes, from one to 26 years of age.

JOHN GILDER SLEEVE.
