From the Baltimore Republican.

Post Office Department .- The vindictive feelings indulged by the opposition towards the administration, displays itself in nothing, perhaps, more strikingly than in their attacks upon the present Head of the Post Office Department. A few years since a desperate effort was made by a committee of the Senate, aided by a dismissed Assistant Post Master General, to convict Mr. Barry of malpractices, by the grosest misrepresentations imaginable, in which he was censured for an error committed by the very individual himself who made the complaint; and after their efforts proved utterly unavailing of fixing upon him any charge of having acted improperly, the whole of the presses of the party, during the recess of Congress after this attempt was made, were almost constantly employed in endeavours to impress upon the public mind the belief that the charges had been established, and that the fact would be fully made apparent by the labours of the committee which had been engaged upon the subject, at the next s ssion. But when the next session commenced, the chairman of that committee was among the missing, talked about resigning on account of ill health, and did not make his appearance until the session was considerably advanced; but, after much solicitation, finally took his seat, but instead of blowing the Post Master General sky high, as had been threatened, the subject was permitted to rest in unbroken slumber.

But notwithstanding the utter failure of the attack, there has been a constant display of vindictive feeling towards Mr. Barry ever since; and he could not have been more bitterly assailed by the whole host of the opposition presses, if the whole of their charges against him had been substantiated. He has been almost the constant object of their assaults; and not unfrequently has been condemned for circumstances which resulted from the bad state of the weather or the roads, and which no human eye could have foreseen nor human power or intellect have prevented. If a snow storm filled up the roads and stopped the travelling of the mails, Mr. Barry was charged with a neglect of duty: if a flood washed away the bridges, and a mail was missed in consequence of it, Mr. Barry was held accountable for it; it a mail was robbed, the crime was laid at Mr. Barry's door : if a mail were sent in a wrong direction by some blunder of a Post Master, Mr. Barry was charged with the fault; if from two slight a covering, a paper failed to reach its place of destination, Mr. Barry was charged with great negligence, if a paper was sent too late to press, Mr. Barry was, on account of it condemned; and if a Post Master failed to deliver a letter when called for the omission was charged to Mr. Barry's ac-

From the recent language of several of the opposition prints, it would seem that an effort is to be made at the next session for another systematic attack upon him. It is alleged that there is found to be a deficiency in the financial affairs of the Department, and it is broadly insinuated that the Post Master General has misapplied the public funds. We coppy from the Globe some remarks upon the subject of the affairs of the Department, which accounts for the low state of the funds, without supposing that they have been diverted from their proper use. The extension of the mail routes, and additional facilities which have been given to communication between different parts af the country, have been very great since Mr. Barry assumed the management of the Department, and it is much more a matter of surprise that the funds should be made to meet to such accumulated expense, than that there should be no excess. But these circumstances are entirely overlooked or disregarded by the opposition, and they would seem to think that all that has been done for the accommodation of the public by the extension of the mail routes, without producing a corresponding increase in the amount of the receipts for postage, is not to be noticed; but that they are only to look at the difference in the amount of the expense which was formerly incurred, and that which is now incurred, in the management of the affairs of the Department; and that, as they now exceed the former amount, Mr. Barry is censureable in proportion to the amount of the Many improvements were made in the management of the affairs of the Department while under the charge of Mr. McLean, and he has received his full meed of praise on account of it; but the improvements made by Mr. Barry have [far more than] equalled the amount of those made by his predecessor, and instead of receiving credit for it, he has met, from the opposition, the treatment we have noticed; and it would seem that they would spare no pains or labour to accomplish, if they could his destruction. And why is there this difference? Why is this persecuting spirit displayed towards Mr. Barry, by the same persons who have manifested a disposition to do justice to his predecessor? It all results from the simple fact, that in giving credit to the one, it is supposed that the credit will redound to the honor of the administration with which he was connected; and by censuring the other it is thought that it will operate to the injury of the present administration. That is evidently the whole sum and substance of the matter.

Mr. Barry has heretofore passed unscathed through the fiery ordeal of his enemies, and we trust that he can bear all the assaults they can make upon him. Let them bring foward their charges, and make all the investigation into the affairs of his Department that they please, and we feel confident he will come out of the trial unhurt. We trust that, as heretofore, he can defy their rage, and will only shine the brighter by the rubbing they may make upon him.

From the Fredericksburg Arena. INTERESTING ANECDOTE. We need hardly tell our readers, that we have been uniform and very decided in our opposition to Gen. Jackson; that we did what we could to prevent his election and re-election; that we have condemned many of the measures of his administration; & that we shall, probably continue to say hard things of him as occasion offers. We take not the less pleasure, however, in giving publicity, for the first time, to an anecdote, which reflects signal honor upon Gen.

Jackson, and indeed upon the American character. The authenticity of the story is unquestionable-We heard it from a gentleman of dis inguished literary eminence, whose writings have placed him among the first of living authors, and of whom any country might be, as his own is, justly proud. It was related in a company, of whom was another distinguished individual, new representing his country abroad, but at the time to which the anecdote refers, holding a situation, near the person of its hero, which enabled him to bear testimony, from personal a nowledge, to its truth.

In the year 1824, our informant met at the table of General Sir George Airey, many distinguished Englishmen, then in Paris. The conversation turned on the pending Presidential election, and fears were expressed that, should General Jackson be elected, the amicable relations between the two countries might be endangered, in consequence of his implacable hostility to England, and his high handed exercise of power, as evinced during his command at New Orleans. The necessity, on the part of our informant of replying to these observations, was superseded by the prompt and generous outbreak of one of the guests-Col. THORNTON, of the 85th-an officer well known for his frank and gallant character, whose regiment suffered severely in the attack of the Sth of January. He testified, in the handsomest terms, to the conduct of Gen. Jackson, as an able and faithful commander on that occasion, and declared that, had he not used the power confided to him in the "high handed" way alluded to, New Orleans would infallibly have been captured. As to the charge of im placable hostility. Col. THORNTON declared, that in the intercourse, by flag and otherwise, between the hostile commanders, Gen. JACKson had been peculiarly courteous and humane, and to support this assertion, begged leave to mention one circumstance. He then proceeded to state, that, on the day after the attack, the British were permitted to bury their dead. lying beyond a certain line a hundred or two yards in advance of Gen. Jackson's entrenchments—all within that line being buried by the Americans themselves. As soon as this melancholy duty was performed, the British General was surprised at receiving a flag, with the swords, epauletts and watches of the officers the had fallen, and a note from Gen. JACKson, couched in the most courteous language, saying that one pair of epauletts was still missing, but that diligent search was making, and when found it should be sent in. These articles-always considered fair objects of pluuder -were rescued by Gen. Jackson, and thus handed over, with a request that they might be transmitted to the relatives of the gallant officers, to whom they had belonged.

This anecdote, and the frank and soldierlike style in which it was given, turned the whole were of reening in favor of the General, and drew forth an expression of applause from all parts of the table. "For myself," said our in formant, "I felt a flush on my cheek, and a thrill of pride through my bosom, and in my heart I thanked the old General for proving, by this chivalrous act, that the defenders of our country were above the sordid feelings of mercenary warfare."
