THE REPUBLIC.

Assuming that the legitimate object of good government is provision for the welfare and happiness of the citizen, his physical contort, educational growth, and moral development, The Republic will bring to this test all economic questions, political action, and governmental measures.

Holding firmly that in a republic, constituted as ours is, political parties are essential, and that they furnish the best, not to say the only means of that constant and severe scrutiny to which power shadd be always subjected. The Republic will insist that the country is not only sale, but safest with its destiny in the keeping of the Republican party; that measures of reform and progress must be carried forward through its instrumentality, and that its permanent ascendancy should be maintained so long as it responds to the demands of enlightened and progressive public difficult.

The Republic will avoid unwarranted consure of opponents as well as indiscriminate p aise of friends-aiming at that degree of independence and candor which concere justice to both. It will not waste words, influence, or power by purely negative criticisms, but will endeavor to promote correct action by attirniatively and plainly showing the better way. True, this line of criticism involves thought, care, investigationwith the exercise of an impartial judgment; but history has conclusively demonstrated that by these means the cause of truth and good government can be best advanced.
