and, though not remote from the station it is sufficiently removed from the highway of travel to find a disadvantage in this circumstance. In the "good old times" this was a matter of no consequence, and the rivals of the great School were, for the most part, in the sume condition. This has been altered of late years, however, and now time and money are both important elements to be considered. Taking this view of the matter, it has been decided, we learn, to build a branch road to Chapel Hill, and this necessary work should be pushed forward without delay. All parts of North Carolina should unite in approving this measure, for it will add greatly to the patronage of the University, which deserves the warmest and most liberal support from all classes of people in our sister State. ----
