The New York Tribune realizes that it is now the turn of the other ox, and its Washington special apologises and . pleads for the habit of using ciphers in a rather pi iful way. "It is not a sus-'picious circumstance to find telegrams incipher passing between prominent republ can politicians in 1876, nor is it any more rema kable that they should feel an aversion to having unfriendly person s han ing over and reading such dispatches than that they should object to a similar examination of their private or political letters." In fact, he use of "honest and honorable means" in the republican canvass * seems part cular to be vindicated. Editorially the Tribune very naturally thinks that the political diskering of a postmaster-general of the United States, a foreign minister of the United States, and the secretary of the interisor of the United Sates is as foreign to this investigation as the Colorado beetle to Colburn's arithmetic. Oh, to be sure, this investigation was only inended to bit "private persons," not people in office. That is at least one advantage inherent in the democratic case-the guilty parties enument as they were, were at least private persors, and not officials of the United
