THE EXTENT TO WHICH AUTHORS, POETS AND STATESMEN HAVE BEEN SWAYED BY THE TENDER PASSION.

Trov Times. It is an old saying, "Whom first we love we never wed," and this, though is near expressed in "Twelfth Night," not strictly true, may be applied to Scott, Byron, George Washington and many other men of note. It is interesting to observe how poets generally pr sent their love ma ters to the public. The personal experience of such men will crop out. Scott, for instance, fell deeply in love in early life with a girl of an aristocratic family, and as he was then merely a poor barrister there was no prospect of success. His father knowing this, and being desirous to bring the matter to a close, sugg ted to the parents the propriety of terminating the acquaintance, and this was done in the least painful manner. The lady was the only daughter of Sir John Stewart, of Forfarshire, and she afterward married Sir William Forbes, the noted Edina burg banker. As Scott was a well-educated young man, of the fine personal appearance and agreeable manners, there could be but little reason for giving the banker preference except his wealth and social rank. Scott felt this keenly through life; in "Rokeby" he revives the episode at some length. Matilda, the heroine of the poem, reps resents the object of his love, who there rejects a poet in favor of one of higher rank and this scene becomes the rivals for the hand of the horoine." Six years afterward Scott wrote thus to dent in domestic history to see a man carrying his first love so tenderly accompanied him till the last, Having his affections, as far as this was possi ble. He appeared, as has been said, man in Congress, when he believes he much attached to his wife through life, and sincerely mourned her death. She Various speculations are affoat as to was, however, intellectually and phyhow long the extra session will last sically inferior to the Scottish ladies of the family may in some degree be ascribed to so unfavorable a union. Jefferson, the author of the declarathinks Congress should transact such pointment. His first love was Virginia business as it was called together for a maiden of reputable family named Rebecca Burwell. The latter, however, preferred a young man named Robinson, and Jefferson, like most sensitive youths, keenly felt the loss of one whom he tenderly loved. Heafterward married Martha Shelton, an attractive widow of twenty-two, and the union proved one of rare happiness. It lasted, however, only ten years, at the end of which Jefferson was left a widower with two daughters-four country from such distress and, that others having died in early childhood. Of these daughters Maria married John W. Epps, while Martha became the a bachelor of 55, and it is probable that wife of Thomas Randolph. The latter he is a similar victim. Such at least is for final action. Over four thousand thus describes the care which her suggested by a line in that description father bestowed on his dying wife: "For four months, during which she portion of the "Elegy." lingered, he was never out of call. A moment before the closing scene he was led from the room in a fainting condition by his sister, and was so overcome that it was feared he would not recover. He kept his bed three week after the funeral, and required my constant attention." Jefferson was evidently a man of deep tenderness, and after his death there was found in his drawer a lock of hair from each of his dead children, which he had kept as secred memorials. Though only thirty-nine when he lost his wife, he never called on Senators Vance and Ransom, married again, and remained for fortyfour years a widower. Washington and Franklin both married widows. It is evident that this illadjudged marriage led him to the opinion that the advantage of years should be on the husband's side, an idea which where the Dr'te says to Vicla:

---Let still the woman take An elder than herself; so wears she to him; So sways she level in her husband's heart. There are however, some very striking instances of a reversal of this order working harmoniously, and never ceased to mourn her death. When this occurred he was forty three, and yet he remained a widower, dying at the age of seventy-six. John Howard, when a very young man, married a widow twenty years his senior. This was an expression of his gratitude for her kindness and attention during a severe illness. They lived in great harmony until her death, which occurred a few years afterward. A second union was also sundered by death, and then Howard entered on that career of philanthropy which has rendered his name immortal. It may be added that John Wilkes, the noted political leader in London a century ago, married a woman ten years his senior. Mohammed's first and favorite wife, Cadijah, was fifteen years older than her husband. To this it might be added that the late Prince Albert was six months younger than his royal bride, and a happier union has never been known in all the history of Windsor Castle. The brilliant yonng Benjamin Disraeli married the widow of his friend and patron,

Wyndham Lewis, twenty years his elder, and has remained since her death faithful to her memory. Among these horrible perversions of matrimony which occasionally deform social history may be mentioned the instance of Dean Swift and Stella. The mystery of Swift's conduct has never been explained, but some have extenua'ed its worst features by the plea of life-long insanity. Stella (Miss John-ston) was induced to leave England (in Dr.blin) in hopes of a speedy marriage. After seventeen years of painful delay she was allowed to become his wife, with the stipu stion that they were still to live apart and never to meet except in the presence of a third person. The he ory of "Vannessa" al voccurs in this connection, and may si ply be mentioned as aggravating the horrible and unnatural baseness of Swift's character. Southey loved Eli h Fricker, but both were poor and he was obliged to I ave home (Bristol) in order to accept an appointment in Portugal. Just before the vessel sailed, they formed their hands in matrimonial bonds, the reason being in order to permit the one to receive rein ttances from the other without scandal. Southey returned in six months, and the union thus begun in poverty was one of prolonged happiness. Coleridge married Sara Fricker. s ster to Edith, but though more intense in his feelings than Southey, he was vastly his inferior in the duties of domestic life. It seems strange that the man who could write:

All thoughts, all passions, all delights. Whatever stir this mortal frame, Are but the ministers of love,

And feed his cacred flame, should desert his wife and family during half a lifetime. Only Southey's charity kept the latter from absolute want. Coleridge, however, was the slave of the opium habit, and this is sufficient to explain almost any degree of domestic neglect. Byron is another instance of one who could write beautifully concerning love, while his history proved how little he appreciated true womanhood. Among those men of genious who felt the keen disappointment of their effections were Irving and Gibbon, both historians who afterward reached fame. Gray, the author of the "Elegy," died of himself which marks the closing

He was of a susceptible nature, but poverty stood in the way of a domestic life. He had a sure support as one of the "fellows" as one of Cambridge University, but this would have been forfeited by marriage. Goldsmith stands on the same list. He was in love with the beautiful Miss Herneck, whom he fondly termed the "Jessamine bride," but the slender and suit until it was successful. that he was much at' ched to Martha Blount, to whom he not only addressed tate. He, however, was an invalid, and spoke of L | life as a 'long disse," a fact which may have had bate. The most incorrigable and unpardonable bachelor of genius was Sir Joshua Reynolds, the famous painter. whose immense weal h deprived him been mentioned. He was, however, intensely devoted to art, and had no room for any other object of the affections. On one occasion meeting Flaxman, who was then a young sculptor struggling for a position, he exclaimed, "Well, sir, I learn that you have married. If so, you are ruined for an artist." Flaxman, however, proved by his success that such was not the case.
