Among our Business Men.

News desires to give a sketch of each of the leading merchants of this city. The object is to show to the State how much basiness this city carries on; to illustrate its commercial importance by the publication of statistics in all the leading articles of merchandise and particularly in cotton, dry goods, meat and grain.

J. P. GULLEY. The name of this gentleman, though comparatively young, is familiar to the people of this city and the surrounding country, as being largely and extensively associated with the dry goods trade, and contributing no little to the growth and development of the general trade and commerce of our State capitol. He naturally takes a practical and liberal view of all subjects, and, like all successful business men, has a deep interest in everything calculated to build up and develop not only our commerce, but every industry. Mr. Gulley was born in Wake county. in 1844, and was raised a farmer, and is now thirty-five years of age. The years of age, he volunteered in Company C, 53d N. C. The Whooping Up Business. New York Times.

The legislation of the country, so far as the senate is concerned, is once more in the hands of the south-a south which is always solid when the distribution of power and place is in question. Unless Speaker Randall's uand forgets its cunning, the roll of the house committees will show an equal preponderance in favor of our lately erring brethren. Eighteen years ago these gentlemen were sitting in the capitol plotting treason against the reare seen at A. T. Stewart & Co.'s for public. To-day, spared by an une paralleled magnanimity, they are back again in their old places, obsequiously attended by the old time northern doughfaces, and ready to give us laws and government.

Anecdote of Victoria.

Queen Victoria was not twenty years of age when she ascended the throne. Coming into possession of power with a heart fresh, tender and pure, with all her instincts inclined to mercy, we may be sure that she found many things that tried her strength and resolution to the utmost. On a bright beautiful morning, the young Queen was waited upon at her palace at Windsor, by the Duke of Wellington, who had brought from London various papers requiring her signature to render them operative. One of them was a sentence of a court martial, pronounced against a soildier of the line-that sentence that he be

Seeing that her majesty was so deeply moved and feeling sure that she would not have the man shot in any event finally confessed that the man was brave and gallant, and really a good soldier. "But" he added, "think of the influence." "Influence!" cried Victoria, her eyes flashing, and her bosom heaving with strong emotion. "Let it be ours to wield influence. I will try mercy in this man's case and I charge you, your grace, to let me know the result. A good soildier, you said, Oh! I thank you for that. And you may tell him that your good wood work save

The Poindexter Trial. R'chmond Dispatch 27 h.

THE YOUNG LADY'S STATEMENT. Miss Isabel Cottrell came into the court-room escorted by Attorney General Field. She was dressed in black and was closely veiled. At the request of counsel for defence she took off her veil. She gave her testimony with great composure. She said: In Janua ary last, I think, was the first time was ever in the store of Wingo, Ellett & Crump. That was certainly the first time I ever saw the young man (Mr. Curtis.) I went into the store for a pair of shoes. I wanted to try them on, and he brought them and wanted to put them on me. I told him I would put them on. He held them and insisted upon buttoning them. I took them and put them on, and finally allowed him to button three buttons. He insisted on buttoning it all the way. and I found some difficulty in preventing him. When I took up my own shoe he insisted on lacing it up for me, her trying them on in the store; which she utterly refused to do. On the third occasion I went to leave a pair and to have plates put upon another pair. Mr. Curtis opened the bundle and held up the pair I had b en wearing, and said : "What a pretty little shoe! You certainly have a pretty little foot. I don't see how you can walk, any way." I said, "You'll oblige me by not commenting on my foot. Please show me the plates." He said he would, and asked me to walk back. He showed me the plates. I told him to use his own discretion about them. He asked me to have a seat. I said no, I would go over to Tyler's, where my friend was waiting for me. I went over to Tyler's and returned in about ten minutes. When I went back into the store he called a youth to bring me the shoes. He would not allow me to I thought the old plates an imposition. (There was then some conversation about the price of the plates.)

CURTIS' ADVANCE UPON THE LADY. Mr. Curtis asked me how I wore my heels off, and to put my foot out and let him see it. I refused. He insisted.

throw my dress aside. There was then some little conversation about the change, which witness related in full. He said that she didn't leave but 75 cents. She said she would rectify the mistake, and started back with him. Then he said, "Yes, you did, too." At the same time he opened his hand, where he had a dollar concealed, having left the 75 cents on the counter. He said : "I certainly could have made that dollar easy." made no reply. I was provoked, and said as little as possible.

THE LAUY AT THE PHAETON.

When I got into the phaeton I was much offended and I so expressed myself to Mis. Bowles-The Common wealth's Attorney: Never mind what you said to her. It is no Mr. Young contended that it was, and explained why he thought so. The Commonwealth's Attorney would cheerfully admit what she said to Mrs. Bowles if defence would consent to allow the statements of the dead man to third parties to come in. After a brief argument the Court said that the witness might state whether or not she said anything to Mrs. Bowles

-not what she said. The witness then said she made known her feelings to Mrs. Bowles; that complaint was made to Mrs. Bowles just as soon as we started off.

MR. POINDEXTER'S VISIT TO THE LADY. To Mr. Young: That was on the Friday proceeding the shooting. I saw Mr. Poindexter the Sunday afterwards. He came to my house and sent a messenger to ask if I would like to go to the country. He was going to his farm and he asked if I wanted to go up to my brother's. During the drive I related all this about Curtis, except about the young man squeesing my arm, which I told him after we got back home. He expressed great indignation, and we both agreed that the young man was very insulting. He stopped at his farm a few minutes and then we went to my brothers. My brother was not at home and we came immediately back and reached home about 2 o'clock. Mr. Poindexter spent the afternoon and evening with me. I live with my brother-in-law, Mr. Alvie, near the

I think it was in the evening just before tea; we were sitting in the parlor __Mr. Poindexter and I. I occupied a rocking-chair immediately before the fire, and I think he was sitting to my left. He took up a book I had been reading, and in which there was a letter of mine. I remarked to him that he shouldn't read that letter. He said he would. I told him he should not. He held the letter off from me in his hand. I started to grab it, and at the same time got up. At the same time he sit back in the chair. I turned to him and said, "That reminds me of some more of that young man's impudence at the shoe-store."

Then I said to him that Curtis squeezed my arm in a very ungentlemanly way when I got into the phaeton. He had been laughing before, but I noticed his expression change, and he said, He did? I said, "He did." I noticed that he was very angry, and he said, "I'll horsewhip that fellow." He said, "What day were you at the store?" I said, "Last Friday." He then asked me for a description of Curtis, and said, "Is he a bigger fellow than I am? if he is I might be afra d to attack him." I said, "You are talla er; but I expect he is the heavier and stronger of the two." I turned to him and said, "Give me my letter." He said in a jocular manner, 'I won't do anything of the kind." The tea bell rang and nothing more was said on the subject.

NEWS OF THE SHOOTING. When I told him about Mr. Curtis squeezing my arm I noticed his expression was one of great anger. He left my house about 11 p. m , or just before. I first heard of the occurrence [shooting, &c.] about 2 or 3 o'clock the next afternoon from Mr. Thomas Poindexter. When I first saw Mr. Thomas Poindexter I was very much surprised. He was not in the habit of v siting me. I didn't think Mr. John Poindexter intended to carry out his threats, and an accident had happened down town-

The Commonwealth's Attorney objected to the witness reciting her conversation with Mr. Thomas Poindexter. Considerable argument followed between the Commonwealth's Attorney and counsel for defence. Defence failed to get in the lady's conversation with Mr. Thomas Poindexter, but pre-

Vienna dispatch says: The Russian circular draws attention to the state of unreadiness in which the time fixed for the evacuation will probably find East-"Johnnie!" said a systematic and ins ern Roumelia. It is scarcely to be organization of the militia and gendarmere can be far enough advanced to Congress. The circular suggests that the international commission, if supported by a mixed corps, could, after completing the constitution, and having it sanctioned by the Porte in Constantinople, return to Phillippepolis, and in concert with the governor appointed by Turkey superintend the introduction of a constitution. From the communications already exchanged between the powers there seems to be every probability of the Russian proposal being favorably received by all except Turkey. Thus Italy, toward the end of 1878, broached the idea of mixed occupation, which was then deemed premature. Austria had already proposed it at that Congress; while, to judge by the past, France is not likely to separate herself from the other powers. England, since the complications in Eastern Roumelia, has taken up the idea, and it cannot be supposed. that Count Schouvaloff would have advocated it at St. Petersburg had he found the general feeling hostile.
