A Shrewd Tactician.

The other evening, while people were on their way home from business through a rather unfrequented part of the city, some man yelled from a hovel with might and main—

"Help! help!"

Everybody seemed frightened, but no one ventured to rescue the man.

"Help! help!! help!!!" floated through the air more wildly than ever.

"I guess some one is trying to murder him," suggested one.

"Perhaps it's a free fight," said another.

"Or his wife may be beating him," put in a third.

"Help! help!! won't some one help me?"

"Who will follow if I'll lead the way?" shouted a pedestrian.

"I will!" shouted several.

"Then come ahead," said the leader as he made a start.

The rest followed and they soon arrived at the house, rushed through the hallway and upstairs and stopped at the door of the room from which the screams emanated.

"Help! help!! help!!!" shouted the inmate.

"Hurry up before he is killed," shouted the crowd in excited tones.

Then they opened the door, for it was not locked and found a man calmly smoking a pipe near the window.

"Who was shouting for help?" screamed the leader.

"I was," was the reply of the individual as he removed the pipe from his mouth and blew a huge cloud of smoke in the air.

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing in particular."

"Then what help do you want?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I just want some one to help me raise 10 cents to get something to eat with. If I beg on the street I'll be arrested, so I solicit from here. Will you give me the ten?"

"Not much!" shouted the crowd simultaneously, as they filed out like a lot of sheep.

A Favor.

"Shad, fresh shad!" lustily screamed a vender the other day, when a man stepped out on the stoop and beckoned him to come over.

He shot down off his wagon in pretty lively style and mounted that stoop two steps at a time.

"I have some fresh shad just caught this morning," he commenced. "I just want you to look at one."

"No I ——"

"O, that's all right, it won't cost you anything to look at them."

Then he went down the stoop and soon returned with a fine pair of shad in his hand.

"Did you ever see finer?" he inquired.

"You don't ——"

"I don't what? I don't know what I am talking about; is that what you mean?"

"No, no; I meant to say that ——"

"Well, why didn't you say it?" demanded the fish vender.

"I was just going to, but you wouldn't give me a chance. I mean to say that I don't want any fish."

"Then why did you call me up?"

"Call you up, call you up? Why, I called you up here to ask you as a special favor not to shout in front of this house. There's a man sick inside."

Then the fishmonger went off with a look of disappointment.

A Queer Society.

A curious institution still exists in Paris, which it would sound profane to call by its true name of the Society of the Damned. These damned are dramatic authors, and they meet once a month and dine at Brebant's. Their number has no fixed limit, only every member to be eligible must have been hissed. An eminent dramatist is selected as chairman, and holds the post for three months. His election generally follows close on a splendid failure. Meilhac, Dennery, Zola and Offenbach have all filled the chair, and presided at the monthly dinner. These dinners are given on the last Friday of the month, and are extraordinary imitations.

Egyptian Locks.

Up to the latter half of the last century, we had not reached to the excellence of the locks that were in use in Egypt and China thousands of years ago, and have now for a very long period run in the line of rediscovery or reapplication of what had been tested so long ago in them. The essential principle of the Egyptian lock was movable pins or nails, dropping, each independently, by its own weight, into the bolt, and securing it on being touched at the right point by corresponding pins at the end of the true key, all of them requiring to be raised together to the proper height. The very latest idea in lock-making may be regarded as suggestions or applications of this principle.

A Picture.

Summer has arrived in the country, and the vines twine themselves around the tumble-down cottage to which cling so many tender memories. The tulips, aglow with the diamonds of night, smile in their balmy beds as though they were the sultanas of the garden. The mignonette and hawthorn flood the golden solitudes of the garden with a wealth of redolence, which wafts the soul to realms divine. And there is the quiet lane with the syringa and lilac bushes; and the cool enchanting woodland, whose spirit of rest is broken only by the songs of happy birds. But sweeter by far than all this—alas! this is too sweet and poetic to spoil with a joke.

A Mean Man.

Once upon a time, according to a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, Jake Mason went to a donation party where six farmers were to contribute a jug of milk apiece. Well, one man—a very mean man—this mean man was Jake Mason—thought it would not make any difference if he contributed water in place of milk; so he filled his jug with water and took it to the donation. When he got there, he turned it over the bung and it ran into a barrel where all the other farmers had poured their milk. Now, what do you think was the result? Why, every one of the six farmers happened to be as mean as Jake Mason. They had all brought water.

A Great Sculptor's Widow.

The widow of the great sculptor, David d'Angers, who died in 1856, threw herself out of a window recently, in Paris, and was killed on the spot. She had been suffering from delirium.

Love.

BY MELEAGER, WHO LIVED BEFORE THE FIRST CENTURY, B. C.

I cry you Love—
At earliest break of day,
But now, even now, his wings the wanderer spread
And passed away,
Leaving his empty bed.
Ho! ye that meet the boy—for such is he,
Full of sweet tears and wit; a fickle sprite,
Laughing and free,
With wings and quiver bright!
Yet know I not on whom to Father Love—
For earth denies the wanton child his name,
And air above,
And the broad sea the same.
With each and all he lives at feud.
Beware
Lest while I speak he cast
A dainty snare
Over your hearts at last.
But see! his hiding-place, his very self,
Close to my hand, behold, the archer lies,
A laughing elf
Within my lady's eyes.

By Hon. A. W. Tourgee.

We are happy to announce to the legal profession that this valuable work is now ready for delivery to subscribers. The labor of preparation and the necessity of securing the utmost possible accuracy in the immense number of citations, has necessarily delayed the work, but the result cannot but be satisfactory to every practioner. In form, matter, completeness and style of publication, it is undoubtedly the best law book ever published in the State containing 750 large double-column pages, 5,162 cited cases and about 30,000 citations.

It will be mailed to subscribers on receipt of the price $12 with 25 cents for postage. Or sent by Express C. O. D. when there is an office convenient. Persons desiring to have the work should order at once, as the edition is a limited one.
