The Milliner-Mary Ann.

Decidedly the best parody of the season we find in the New Haven Register, purporting to have been delivered at a spiritual seance by the apparition of the still extant T. B. Aldrich. It is a travesty of his pleasant lines concerning "The Sultan Shah Zahman:

When the milliner Mary Ann
Goes to the city of Man-hat-tan,
Even before she ge s so far
As her seat in the foremost palace car,
And settles herself for an easy spin,
The lord of her bosom, Nose-in-Bloom,
Orders a feast in the inner room,
Where milliner maids with wicked eyes
Bend over bonnets and frills and ties,—
Snapdark, peanut and chinquapin,
Limburger cheese, Bologna sausage,
Tripe, and herring and hard boiled eggs,
And bottled lager that plumps the corsage.

And watermen with two quart kegs
Of saddle rocks; sardines and cream,
And all that the milliner palate may dream.
Pass in and out of that inner door,
Scattered over the workroom floor
Are patterns and riches, pleatings and pins:
And a sound as of wagging the jaws begins
To be heard, and the delicate viands mel;
One stout milliner loosens her belt,
And scabs with the oyster broth the tip
Of her dainty nose; and her ruby lip
Breathes of sardines, but alas, 'tis spread
Not for the milliner cane and fled,
Not for the milliner Mary Ann,
For she's gone to the city Man-hat-tan.

Then at the tap of feet on the floor
An organ grinder outside the door
Strikes up an air from "Pinafore,"
And to the hoarse, asthmatic bars
Of music, rise and fall the stars
Of the swift sweet hoofs. Embryo corns
Burn each toe, anon to bloom;
And there in that diminutive room,
Finest with the scents of Summer morns
And harem musk, and Irish stew,
Sits Naughty Eyes on a cane seat chair,
Singing softly and hanging her hair,
As if the hero were true, he sits there too.
This was the milliner Mary Ann
Goes to the city Man-hat-tan.

Now when I see an extra load
Of non-digestibles cross the road
To the milliner man's abode,
I know as well as I know to eat,
I know as well as a cat knows meat,
That the innocent milliner Mary Ann
Has gone to the city Man-hat-tan.

Origin of the Omnibus.

The Revue de Bretagne et de Vendee gives the following account of the introduction of the substantive, "omnibus." A certain M. Baudry, established in 1827 hot baths in a suburb of Nantes. As customers did not come in sufficient numbers, he resolved as the best means for attracting them to send at fixed hours a long car to the center of the town. This car was known at first as the "Six-francs baths de Richebourg;" but a friend of Baudry's suggested as a shorter and more convenient designation the word "omnibus," which had already obtained a certain vogue, because a grocer of the town named Omnes had had painted over his shop the words "Omnes Omnibus." Baudry established shortly after lines of omnibuses at Bordeaux and Paris, but the rigorous winter of 1829, which rendered the streets very difficult and forage very dear, caused him to die of grief. The omnibus, however, survived both the bad winter and its founder.
