As a rule the wives of the President's Cabinet officers are elderly women, and having no young children, are enabled to devote all their time to social duties. It is not so with this administration There are many babies in the official which reminds the Jenness Miller Monthly to state that babis are quite the style this reign. Of course, Mrs. Cleveland's famous two are resoon sible for the rage, and though they, as far as the public in general is concerned. are uns en of the eye and unpictured of camera, yet their mere presence in the White House is enough to make all b bydom fashionable. And thus it comes about that the sayings of little Margaret Bissell, the pranks of the juvenile representatives of the official house of Swith and the accomplishments of the grand-children of the Secretary of the Treasury receive almost as much space in the society reports as the descriptions of their aternal relatives' dinner gowns, and it is by no means uncommon for a little be frilled toddler to stand by the side of her bedecked mamma and share her adula-tions until the novelty has really worn off, and she prefers to run away and play with her doll.
