Washington. D. C., Jan. 8. The Carlisle financial bill stands a many Northeastern Democrats oppose it, because it permits State banks of issue, and too many Western and Southern men oppose it because it doesn't give free coinage, to make the prospect bright. Indeed, the vote in the caucus disclosed so much opposition as to dis-courage all advocates of the measure except the hopeful Mr. Springer, and he is ot so buoyant as he was.

The very hopelessness of passing that measure, and the generally expressed necessity of doing something, has at last moved the moribund Senate to discussing what can be passed. It is no longer a question as to which is the best scheme, but what scheme will protect the Treasury and permit an increase of the currency and can be passed. The following summary gives the gist of the scheme proposed in the Senate, and which, it is believed, has a chance of W. A. Hill, O. becoming a law at this session:
