

THE KING DINES WITH BUCHANAN.

By ROBERT BARR.

(Copyrighted, 1902, by Robert Barr.)

"When kings frown, courtiers tremble," said Sir Donald Sinclair to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, "but in Stirling the case seems reversed. The courtiers frown and the King looks anxiously toward them."

"Indeed," replied the prelate, "that may well be. When a man invites a company to dine with him, and then makes the discovery that his larder is empty, there is cause for anxiety, be he king or churl. In truth, my warm's beginning to think my throat's cut." And the learned churchman sympathetically smoothed down that portion of his person first named whose rounded countour gave evidence that its owner was accustomed to ample rations regularly served.

"Ah, well," continued Sir Donald, "his youthful Majesty's foot is hardly in the stirrup yet, and I'm much mistaken in the glint of his eyes and the tint of his beard, if once he is firmly in the saddle the horse will not feel the prick of the spur, should it try any tricks with him."

"Scotland would be none the worse of a firm King," admitted the Archbishop, glancing furtively at the person they were discussing, "but James has been so long under the control of others that it will need some force of character to establish a will of his own. I doubt he is but a nooght posing as a nine," concluded his reverence in a lower tone of voice.

"I know little of mathematics," said Sir Donald, "but yet enough to tell me that a nooght needs merely a flourish to become a nine, and those nine among us who think him a nooght, may become nooghts should he prove a nine. There's a problem in figures for you, Archbishop."

The young man to whom they referred, James, the fifth of that name, had been pacing the floor a little distance from the large group of hungry men who were awaiting their dinner with some impatience. Now and then the King paused in his preambulation, and gazed out of a window overlooking the courtyard, again resuming his disturbed march when his brief scrutiny was completed. The members of the group talked in whispers, one with another, none too well pleased at being kept waiting for so important a function as a meal.

Suddenly there was a clatter of horse's hoofs in the courtyard. The King turned once more to the window, glanced a moment at the commotion below, then gave utterance to an exclamation of annoyance, his right hand clenching angrily. Wheeling quickly to the guards at the door he cried:

"Bring the chief huntsman here at once, and a prod in the back with a pike may make up for his loitering in the courtyard."

The men, who stood like statues with long axes at the doorway, made no move; but two soldiers, sitting on a bench outside, sprang to their feet and ran clattering down the stair. They returned presently with the chief huntsman, whom they projected suddenly into the room with a violence little to the woodman's taste, for he neglected to remove his bonnet in the royal presence, and so far forgot himself as to turn his head when he recovered his equilibrium, roundly cursing those who had made a projectile of him.

"Well, woodlander!" cried the King, his stern voice ringing down again from the lofty rafters of the great hall. "Are there no deer in my forests of the north?"

"Deer in plenty, Your Majesty," answered the fellow with a mixture of defiance and disrespect, which in truth seemed to tinge the manners of all present. "There are deer in the King's forest, and yet a lack of venison in the King's larder!"

"What mean you by that, you scoundrel?" exclaimed the King, a flush overspreading his face, ruddy as his beard. "Have your marksmen lost their skill with bow and arrow, that you return destitute to the castle?"

"The marksmen are expert as ever, Your Majesty, and their arrows fly as unerringly to their billet, but in these rude times, Your Majesty, the stink of an arrow may not be followed by the whetting of a butcher's knife."

The King took an impatient step forward, then checked himself. One or two among the group of noblemen near the door laughed, and there was a ripple of suppressed merriment over the whole company. At first the frown on the King's brow deepened, and then as suddenly it cleared away, and a puff of wind scatters the mist from the heights of Stirling. When the King spoke again it was in a calm, even voice. "As I understand you, there was no difficulty in capturing the deer, but you encountered some obstacle between the forest and Stirling which caused you to return empty-handed. I hope you have not added the occupation of itinerant fletcher to the noble calling of forest huntsman?"

"Indeed, Your Majesty," replied the unabashed hunter, "the profession of fletcher was forced upon me. The deer we had slaughtered found it impossible to win by the gates of Arnprior."

"Ah! John Buchanan then happened to need venison as you passed?"

"Your Majesty has hit the gold there. Buchanan not only needed it but took it from us."

"Did you inform him that your cargo was intended for the larder of the King?"

"I told him that in so many words, Your Majesty; and he replied that if James was King in Stirling, John was King in Kippen, and having the shorter name, he took the shorter method of supplying his kitchen."

"Made you any effort to defend your gear?"

"Truth to say, Your Majesty, that were a useless trial. The huntsmen who will face the deer think no shame to turn his back on the wild boar, and Buchanan, when he demanded Your Majesty's venison, was well supported by a number of mad caterans with drawn swords in their hands, who had made us for a lack of good meat with a plentitude of strong drink. Resistance was futile, and we were fain to take the hank that was handed to us, even though the ashes were upon it. Ronald of the Hills, a daft Heilan man, who knew no better, drew an arrow to his ear and would have pinned Buchanan to his own gate, resulting in the destruction of us all, had I not, with my stave, smote the weapon from his hand. Then the mad youth made such to do that we had just to tie him up and bring him to Stirling on the horse's back like a sack of fodder."

"Your caution does credit to your Lowland breeding, master huntsman, and the conduct of Ronald cannot be too severely condemned. Bring him here, I beg of you, that he may receive the King's censure."

Ronald was brought in, a wild, unkempt figure, his scanty dress disordered, bearing witness to the struggle in which he had but lately been engaged. His elbows were pinned behind him, and his shock of red hair stood out like a heather broom. He scowled fiercely at the huntsman, and that cautious individual edged away from him, bound as he was.

"By my beard! as the men of the heathen East swear," said the King, "his hair somewhat matches my own in hue. Ronald, what is the first duty of a huntsman?"

"He speaks only the Gaelic, Your Majesty," explained the royal ranger.

"You have the Gaelic, MacNeish," continued the King, addressing one of his train. "Expound to him, I beg of you, my question: What is the first duty of a huntsman?"

MacNeish, stepping forward, put the question in Gaelic and received Ronald's reply.

"He says, Your Majesty, that a huntsman's first duty is to kill the game he is sent for."

"Quite right," and the King nodded approval. "Ask him if he knows as well the second duty of a huntsman."

Ronald's eyes flashed as he gave his answer with a vehemence that caused the chief huntsman to move still further away from him.

"He says, Your Majesty," translated MacNeish, "that the second duty of a huntsman is to cut the throat of any too, for he never winked an eyelash when the sword swung above him; an admirable combination of qualities whether in a MacFarlane or a MacNeish. And now, gentlemen," continued His Majesty, "although the affair of the huntsman is settled, it brings us no nearer our venison. If the cook will not to the King, then must the King to the cook. Gentlemen, to your arms and your horses! They say a Scotsman fights well when he is hungry; let us put the proverb to the test. We ride and dine with his Majesty of Kippen."

A spontaneous cheer burst from every man in the great hall to the accompaniment of a rattle of swords. Most of those present were more anxious to follow the King to a contest than into a council chamber. When silence ensued, the mild voice of the Archbishop, perhaps because it was due to his profession, put in a reasonable word, and the nobles scowled, for they knew he had great influence with the King.

"Your Majesty, if the Buchanans are drunk—"

"If they are drunk, my Lord Archbishop," interrupted James, "we will sober them. 'Tis a duty even the church owes to the inebriate." And with that he led the way out of the hall, his reply clearing the brows of his followers.

A few minutes later a clattering cavalcade rode forth from the Castle of Stirling, through the town and down the path of Ballengeich, a score of soldiers bringing up the tail of the procession; and in due time the company came to the entrance of Arnprior Castle. There seemed like to be opposition at the gate, but Sir Donald, spurring his horse forward among the guard, scattered the members of it right and left, and raising both voice and sword, shouted:

"The King! The King! Make way for the King of Scotland!"

The defenders seeing themselves outnumbered, as the huntsmen had been in that locality a short time before, gave up their axes to the invaders as meekly as the royal rangers had given up their venison.

The King placed his own guard at the gate. Springing from his horse he entered the castle door, and mounted the stone steps, sword in hand, his retinue close at his heels. The great hall to which they ascended was no monk's chapel of silence. There was wafted to them, or rather blown down upon them like a fierce hurricane, the martial strains of "Buchanan Forever," played by pipers anything but scant of wind; yet this tornado was not sufficient with his back against the table, and in the sudden silence it seemed long ere he found his tongue. At last he said: "Does the King come as a guest with a drawn sword in his hand?"

"As you get north of Stirling, Buchanan," replied James with a smile, "it is customary to bring the knife with you when you go out to dine. But I am quite in agreement with the Laird of Arnprior in thinking the sword an ill ornament in a banqueting hall, therefore bestow your weapons on Sir Donald here, and command your clan now present to disarm."

With visible reluctance Buchanan divested himself of sword and dirk, and his comrades, now stricken dumb, followed his example. The weapons were thrown together in a corner of the hall where some of the King's soldiers stood guard over them. His Majesty's prediction regarding the sobering effect of his advent was amply fulfilled. The disarmed men looked with dismay on one another, for they knew that such a prelude might well have its grand finale at the block or the gibbet. The King, although seemingly in high spirits, was an unknown quantity, and before now there had been those in power who, with a smile on their lips, had sent doomed men to a scaffold.

"In intercepting my venison, Buchanan," continued the King, with the utmost politeness, "you were actuated by one of two motives. Your intervention was either an insult to the King or it was an intimation that you desired to become his cook. In which light am I to view your action, Buchanan?"

There was in the King's voice a sinister ring as he uttered this sentence that belied the smile upon his lips, and apprehension deepened as all present awaited Buchanan's reply. At the word "cook" he had straightened himself, and a deeper flush than the wine had left there overspread his countenance. Now he bowed with deference and said: "It has ever been my ambition to see Your Majesty grace with his presence my humble board."

"I was sure of it," cried James, with a hearty laugh, which brought relief to the anxious hearts of many standing before him. The King thrust his sword into the scabbard and, with a clangor of hilt on iron, those behind him followed his example.

"And now," cried James, "let the King's men eat while the laird's men wait upon them. And as for you, John Buchanan, it is today my pleasure that you have the honor of being my cup-bearer."

Whether the honor thus thrust upon the Laird of Arnprior was as much to his liking as an invitation to sit down with his guest would have been, is questionable, but he served his Majesty with good grace, and the King was loud in his praise of the venison, although his compliments fell sadly on the ears of the hungry men who watched it disappear so rapidly. At the end of the least James rose with his flagon in his hand.

"I give you the King," he cried, "the King of Kippen. When I left Stirling I had made up my mind that there could be but one King in a country, but glorious Scotland shall have no such restriction, and I bestow upon Buchanan, whose ample cheer we have done justice to the title of King of Kippen, so long as he does not fall into the error of supposing that Kippen includes all of Scotland, instead of Scotland including Kippen. And so, Laird of Arnprior, King of Kippen, we drink your good health, and when next my venison passes your door take only that portion of it which bears the same relation to the whole as the district of Kippen does to broad Scotland."

The toast was drunk with cheers, and when silence came the King of Kippen, casting a rueful glance along the empty board, said:

"I thank Your Majesty for your good wishes, but in truth the advice you give will be hard to follow, for I see I should have stolen twice the quantity of venison I did, because as I have not done so I and my men are like to go hungry."

And thus Buchanan came into his title of King of Kippen, although he had to wait some time for his dinner on the day he acquired the distinction.

SPECIAL RATES VIA SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY.

$7.50—From Raleigh to Charlotte and return, account of annual meeting of Shriners, Charlotte, N. C., December 12th. Tickets on sale December 11th and 12th, with final return limit December 14th. Tickets on sale from all stations in North and South Carolina, including Norfolk and Suffolk, Va., on the same basis.

$5.55—Raleigh to Richmond and return, account of the annual football game between the University of North Carolina and University of Virginia at Richmond, Va., Thanksgiving Day, November 27th. Tickets will be sold November 26th and for morning trains of 27th, and returning on the 28th. Rates on same basis will apply from Wilmington, Charlotte and intermediate points.

Trains leave Raleigh at 1:30 a. m. and 11:50 a. m., arriving at Richmond 5:35 a. m. and 4:55 p. m., respectively. For further information apply to C. H. GATTIS, C. P. and T. A., Raleigh, N. C. H. S. LEARD, T. P. A., Raleigh, N. C.

FREE
An Old Reliable Cure for WHICH CURES
Rheumatism or Catarrh
Blood Diseases, Bone Pains.

Recent or old deep-seated cases are always sure signs of impure blood. If you have aches and pains in bones, joints, or back, hot, swollen muscles of rheumatism; hawking, spitting, drooping in throat, impaired hearing or eyesight, bad breath of catarrh, take a few bottles of B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), which will make a perfect cure through the blood. Especially if the case is an old one, deep-seated one, Blood Balm will cure when all else fails. B. B. B. makes the blood pure and rich, and stops all aches, and makes the breath sweet. Druggists, $1. By writing Blood Balm Company, No. 109 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga., sufferers may have a treatment of B. B. B. sent free, and test it at home. Medicine sent at once, prepaid. Describe trouble, and free medical advice given until cured. As Blood Balm has cured thousands of hopeless cases, sufferers are advised to give B. B. B. a trial.

CABLE, CONOVER, AND KINGSBURY PIANOS

are instruments of world renowned reputation Sold direct by the makers. Payments made to suit the purchaser. Catalogues furnished free on application.

THE CABLE CO.,
Richmond, Va.
Raleigh Marble Works
COOPER BROS., Props.

MARBLE AND GRANITE MONUMENTS.

Send for catalogue. We pay the freight.

THE OLD NICK WILLIAMS CO.
THE OLDEST HOUSE
AND
OLD NICK WILLIAMS
ESTABLISHED 1168.

134 years in same family on same plantation. Goods 1 to 29 years old—$1 to $5 per gallon.

Rye, Corn, Bourbon and Wheat Whiskies; Peach, Apple and Blackberry Bragies, so pure, not a minute's headache in a barrel. We will pay freight or express. Will ship one gallon or carload lots. No marks on packages. Plain envelopes used. Write for prices.

THE OLD NICK WILLIAMS CO.,
or address J. Box 11, Williams, N. C.

CATARRH THE CLEANSING AND HEALING CURE FOR Catarrh is Ely's Cream Balm

COLD IN HEAD Easy and pleasant to use. Contains no injurious drug. It quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. It opens and cleanses the nasal passages. Allays inflammation. Heals and protects the membrane. Restores the senses of taste and smell. Large size, 50c at druggists or by mail; trial size, 10c by mail. ELY BROS., 56 Warren St., New York.

Southeastern Lime and Cement Co.,
Charleston, S. C., Southern Agents.

Best Natural Cement. Equal to a Portland land

PRICES CHEAP AS ROSENDALE OR LOUISVILLE. WRITE US

COAL, WOOD, FEED.

Now on Hand and on Roads:

2,000 BUSHELS PRIME CORN.
1,000 BUSHELS PRIME OATS.
400 BUSHELS CORN, OAT AND WHEAT CHOPS.
TWO CARLOADS CHOICE WESTERN TIMOTHY HAY.
1,000 TONS BEST DOMESTIC COALS.
1,000 CORDS SEASONED PINE AND OAK WOOD, AT VERY CLOSE CASH PRICES BY

JONES & POWELL
Raleigh, N. C.
PHONES 41 AND 71.

North Carolina, Wake County—In the Superior Court.

In the matter of the will of John A. Honeycutt, deceased, John W. Riddish, propounder, J. C. Marcom, administrator of Mary Honeycutt, deceased, vs. T. L. Honeycutt, caveator.

To Emily Davis and Joseph Bailly you are hereby notified that on the 22nd day of October, 1902, T. L. Honeycutt, heir at law of John A. Honeycutt, deceased, in his own behalf and in the behalf of the other heirs at law, of said John A. Honeycutt, deceased, came into court and entered a caveat to the probate of a paper-writing admitted to probate on the 25th day of January, 1899, as the last will and testament of John A. Honeycutt, deceased, and which is recorded in Book D, on page 230.

That upon the entering of said caveat and upon the caveat giving bond as required by the Statute, the issue, to-wit: "Is the paper writing in controversy or any part thereof, and if so what part, the last will and testament of said John A. Honeycutt, deceased," was transferred from the clerk's docket to the Civil Issue Docket of the Superior court of Wake county, for trial at the January term, 1903, of said court, pursuant to Section 2189 of the Code of North Carolina. You are hereby notified and cited to be and appear before the judge of the said Superior court of Wake county, at a court to be held for the county of Wake, at the court house, in the city of Raleigh, on January 5th, 1903, and make yourself a party to said above entitled proceedings, if you choose to do so.

Witness my hand at office in Raleigh, N. C., this 22nd day of October, 1902.

W. M. ROSS,
Clerk Superior Court.
H. E. NORRIS, Attorney.
10-28-6w

*****
C. E. HARTGE,
ARCHITECT,
RALBIGH, N. C.
Office in Carolina Trust Building.
*****

LITHOGRAPHED

LETTERHEADS, BILL HEADS, AND CHECKS.
LABELS, SHOWCARDS, AND POSTERS.
LOWEST PRICES, NEATEST DESIGNS, ATTRACTIVE WORK.

A. HOEN & COMPANY,
Richmond, Va.