Upheld by the United States Court

A Section by Finding W. F. Niverman, Involving the Company of the Company of Dather, Toyan, Restard the P. Van Winkle Gin and Machine Works, of Atlanta. The Murray Company brought suit to enjoin the Van Winkle Company from continuing to manufacture the cotton elevator and distributor, which it has been making and marketing for a number of years, also to recover damages claimed to be due for sales of the elevator already made by the Atlanta Com-

The claim was made that this elevator was an infringement of the Murray patent No. 472,607. A similar suit in-volving similar issues, had been fought out and won by the Murray Company against the Continental Gin Company, in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Delaware, prior to filing the suit against the Van Winkle Company. In its defense, the Van Winkle Company did not call experts to the stand, but had TESTS MADE BY DISINTERESTED PRACTICAL MECHANICS, of the machines manufactured respectively by the Texas and the Georgia attorneys in the South, recreasented the Van Winkle Company. attorneys in the South, represented the Van Winkie Company.

In the course of his opinion, Judge Newman said:
Ti seems to me that the complainant (The Murray Company) has failed to emintain its proposition, that the Murray apparatus will work as claimed in the particular response to which the above best prompt has been directed. That is. It appears to me it will not deliver the outlier through the churc in the manner cialmed, opening by its own weight, and by gravity the values at the manner calmed, opening by its own weight, and by gravity the values at the lower part of the chuts, and passing the action through."

Judge Newman concludes his axtensive and able opinion as follows:

"It must be held, therefore, that defredued in actitied to a decree dismining the bill with costs to the Murray Company."
