Stand With News and Observer for State Education

Appreciates Highly Editorial in News and Observer; Says: "We Baptists Unpatriotic or Selfish, but if Wo Permit or Submit to Such Leadership as Now Seems the Case, We Will Deserve to Be so Accused,"

Greensboro, Dec. 24.—The manner in which the News and Observer has come to the defense of the State's educational institutions from the at-tacks of an element of the great Bapis very highly appreciated in Greens-boro, the seat of that noble college for the training of women teachers for the public and private schools and colleges, and of the industrial and agricultural college for colored men. As an evidence of this spirit of op-position to this fight to cripple all educational institutions, and State that it by no means represents a very large number of Baptists. I was surprised this morning, while sitting at the desk of a prominent business man here, a graduate of Wake Forest, staunch Baptist and consecrated Christian, to see pasted prominently on an improvised bulletin board sitting there, the following: "The greatest of the Southern 'educational governors,' the oreat-est president of a Southern university, the greatest president of a Southern college for women, the greatest superintendent of public instruction in the South-the greatest group of men in recent Southern History—were all North Carolinians. They were great because they gave their lives to this greatest idea in present Southern life; public education. North Carolina will have no greater claim on history than this, and as time passes the size of the claim will grow. We are too close to see how great the work is; but we are not so blind as to think that the idea is abent. The work that has been started may be made to pause; the State may drop from has led; even irreparable damage may be done. But an idea organ cally lodged in the life of the pe ple, the heart of their hope for their shildren and their children's children cannot be struck down by any power on earth marshalled under any flag heatever."
