

Speech of Major E. J. Hale On Occasion of Wyatt Unveiling

Henry L. Wyatt, R. H. Hicks and R. H. Bradley leaped the works and sent on this occasion. At the first volley from the enemy Wyatt was killed.

The troops engaged on our side were eight hundred men of the First North Carolina Regiment, and some four hundred Virginians. Upon the morning of the 15th of June, 1862, the 21st New York, the 1st Vermont, and the 1st New Hampshire were all under command of Brigadier-General Pierce.

The battle lasted from 3 o'clock until half past one. The enemy lost heart upon the death of Winthrop, and shortly after retreated.

BATTLE OF BETHEL

The battle of Bethel was but a small affair in itself, if we compare it with the magnitude of conflicts between great bodies of men of which it was the prelude.

Our losses were but 140 men as follows: North Carolinians 1 killed, 8 wounded; Virginians 3 wounded.

The Federal losses were reported by General B. F. Foy as 18 killed, including James W. Smith and Lieutenant-General W. W. Wood, and 100 missing. There were a great number of wounded.

The troops engaged on our side were the 21st New York, the 1st Vermont, and the 1st New Hampshire.

The result was a tactical success for the Federal forces, but a strategic defeat. The Federal forces were backed by the superior artillery of the Federal Government, and the officers were more experienced.

VIRGINIA MONUMENT

The General Assembly of 1861 appointed a commission to mark the place where Wyatt fell. In course of time the Virginia monument was erected in the neighborhood of Bethel with a view to marking a site that had been the scene of the battle.

The monument is a simple structure of stone, and is situated on a hill overlooking the battle site.

The inscription on the monument reads: 'Here on the 15th of June 1862, the brave soldiers of the Commonwealth of Virginia fought the battle of Bethel.'
