LACE TRIMMED LINEN.

An unpretentious little one piece linen frock is the subject of today's sketch. Extremely well cut is the frock which, closing the entire length of the front, will launder successfully. The blouse is slightly on the surplice in effect with narrow revers of linen continuing into a round collar at the back and supplemented by a similarly shaped collar of Irish crochet. The sleeves are trimmed with perpendicular bands of this lace holding the turn back cuff of linen. A tunic effect is arrived at in the skirt by the cutting away of a portion of the bottom and the inserting beneath it of an extra portion of linen banded by the Irish lace.

AT OLD FORT YOUNG

I stand by the vacant hearth stone,
Where the firelight sheds no ray
And list, in the breathing silence,
For the sounds of another day

Tapping of hasty footfalls,
Murmurs of voices past,
Rustle of dainty garments
Of the children— home at last.

Home from the southern jungles,
Home from the prairies wide,
Home from the stormy billows
They have gathered, side by side.

Silent their voice in counsel
And the writer's task is o'er
Stilled is the roar of cannon
And the camp-fires flash no more.

Dark is the hall and quiet,
Where they danced by the torches'
glare
Dim are the eyes that dazzled
Faded the faces fair.

Brave were the men and honest
And the women pure and sweet
Whether God called or duty
Never went back nor fear.

Holding the truth as they saw it,
Seeking not places nor power,
Loving the land that bore them
Even in death's dark hour.

"Back to the old hills of Dublin
Let us lie down and be still
Let the fern fringe above us
And the mocking bird sing as he will."

By Mrs Sallie Lloyd Watson, Hickory N. C.
