The woman tried to break off from Waiston, left her abode in Wayne couny and came over in to the Wiggin's Mill section.

Waiston, however, was not to be so omily ovaded, and made three attempts, bafers the fatal one, to get into the good graces of the woman again. Fol-lowing her departure Monday, he came over and tried to persuade her to return. She explained her new purpose to reform and he went away without attampting to force her return. On yea-tarday morning, however, he came back again, and made a second effort to permade her to,go with him. As she still refused to accompany him, he seized we of the woman's small children and rried them back, thinking that she ald follow, from a mother's instinct to protect her young. As she still failed to show up, later in the day he forced his wife to accompany him on his last errand, his purpose being for her to tell the woman that she did not object to the continuance of the relations between w husband and the woman. With them he also brought along his six-year-old daughter, who was also destined to play part in the harrowing experiences of the evening. Upon reaching the Sarah Smith home which Baker had drawn upon being forced to drop his gun. During the scuffie Walston had been continuously pushed backwards towards the door and upon being thwarted in his final effort of assault, fell from the porch dend.

Believing Walston still alive, and anxious to carry his mother out of danger, Baker picked her up on his shoulder and attempted to carry her over to the home of a nearby neighbor, Mr. J. J. Aycock. Finding himself too weak, however, from loss of blood, he lay his mother on the ground, and proceeded to give the alarm.

Mr. Aycock immediately telephoned and Get Yours Now R. BOOM

Raleigh, N. C., January 10, 1917 The News and Observer Publishing Co., City.

Gentlemen: -

I wish to advise you that I believe your want advertisement columns are indispensible in the maintenance and increase of my business. Several weeks ago I inserted a two-line want advertisement in your paper, costing only 20¢, and realized a profit of $19.80, or a 990%

This is to me convincing proof that want advertisements in The News and Observer are good investments, and I shall continue to use them regularly and, as usual, profitably,

Very truly yours,

Manager, National Employment Bureau.

Does not the above uphold the oft-declared statement that News and Observer want advertisements pay handsome dividends? They made a profit of almost 1000% for Mr. Conway, and they will do the same for you.

Your advertisement will gladly be accepted over the telephone.
