"Old Ben," The Fox Hound That Was Accused of Being a Rahbit Dog_How He Redeemed Himself in an Exciting For Chase in Mecklenburg County

> By "RED BUCK." Washington, Feb. 24.-Nine out of ter letters I have had from North Carolin about my "Tardy Tar Heel Tales" as for more about dogs, and other animals and not so much about men. . The lighter vein stuff is what the peo ple of the State seem to want. I at tribute this to the European War, will all of its horrors and dangurs. The av erage person has read so much about the shedding of blood that he wants to the shedding of beom that he wants to forgot it, and view the brighter side o the picture. Therefore, I shall tell to story of "Old Ben, a stump-tailed fo dog." and the way he redeemed him dog, self. Old Ben had real sense, and knew what to do and how to do it when a for scent came to him.

Ban was three or four years old when I made his acquaintance. His black back, tan legs, long thin ears, and keet tail told of aristocratic blood, and his poise and assurance, training. Ben was not haughty but he had the air of a fe-baund of ability and the air of a fehound of ability and experience. His stump-tail, which thleves who stole him Hi made for him, stood erect, Old Ben was not pedigreed, but hi-predecessors were of the famous Mar-shall Williams stock of Cumberlan. county. He was born, reared and train ed near Fnyetteville, where it is easie. to find a fox than a rabbit.

I saw Ben in many races in Cumber land. Lawrence A. Williamson, my old hunting companion, had him in his pack. In any party of running dogs the sweet clear, tenor voice of Ben could be heard naybe not in the lead but somewhere near there. Mr. Williamson never lauded Ben for his speed but his relia bility. "I can always depend on Ben he runs nothing but a fox," he would were ready to start. At an hour when the good peope of Matthews slept we stole away through the deserted streets and were soon on our way to the country.

Joe Patchen, a tireless rambler, and Music were chained so that we could get them to the right place before let-ting them start to hunt. The other dogs trotted on at a safe distance in front of our teams.

As day began to break we drove to the old Wallace place, unhitched our horses and started for the hunt. The dogs were very eager, and as we turned intd a road to go to the north of the house, they struck the track of a strange dog, and made the woods ring with much barking. The atmospheric conditions were first-class for sound-carrying and we alarmed the neighborhood with our canine melody. We took a short round back of the Wallace place without result. The ounds hunted well, but found nothing. After a while we returned to our buggies and left our overconts and lan-
