LATE REMEDIES FOR SNAKE BITES

Old Ones Discarded As More Dangerous Than Original Wound

(Dr. Harris A. Houghton in New York Herald.)

So far as it has been possible to ascertain, the following is the first prescription for snake bite, taken from the twenty-first chapter of Numbers, and the occurrence happened in 1450 B. C., according to the chronology of Usher:

"5. And the people spake against God and against Moses. Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread and there is no water; and our soul loatheth this light bread."

"6. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died."

"7. Therefore, the people came unto Moses, and said, We have sinned, we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee; pray unto the Lord, that he take away the serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people."

"8. And the Lord said unto Moses, make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole; and it shall come to pass that every one that is bitten, when he loatheth upon it, shall live."

"9. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived."

It was no one of those frequent occasions when the children of Israel had wandered far from their usual paths of rectitude and had to be called up with a short lurch. Nearly eight hundred years later, as related in the second book of Kings, a regular reform king set on the throne of Israel, and his name was Hezekiah. Precedent was nothing to him, for:

"4. He removed the high places and break the images, and cut down the groves and break in pieces the brasen serpent that Moses had made; for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it, and he called it Nehushtan."

Old Remedy Has Gone.

This story from the wanderings of the Israelites furnishes several interesting themes for discussion. The time is opportune, for many are in the mountains where an occasional rattler makes it exciting if not dangerous. Then, too, the favorite old time remedy for snake bite is theoretically not available at this time—i. e., whiskey—externally, internally and eternally. So it is quite in order to find out really how the modern scientist would treat a snake bite.

In North America there are practically only two types of poisonous snakes, the rattler and the copperhead, which finds homes largely in our Southern States. The bites of both are extremely dangerous, but not always fatal, which makes it difficult to determine oftentimes just what method of treatment is efficacious.

Take the whiskey cure, for instance. There has been no more persisting superstition in or out of the profession for many decades than the effectiveness of this treatment. Now, it has been thoroughly proven that the human organism is obliged to fight two serious intoxications instead of one, when the old whiskey treatment is administered for snake bite. It has been a good deal easier for the average man to forget the old chicken treatment of the Kentucky mountains than the whiskey cure. This consisted of ripping the body of a black hen open and putting that part bitten within the gory folds.

Rattler's Poison Acts Quickly.

The poison of the rattler, injected usually into a hand or leg through the fang at the time of the bite acts quickly. Burning pain follows immediately, and within fifteen minutes constitutional symptoms appear. First the legs begin to get weak and finally refuse support to the unfortunate victim. There is great prostration, feeble and fast pulse, and beads of perspiration stand out on a face, which is sallow and pale. The mind begins to wander and finally there is lethargy and no attention is paid to surroundings. Death, if it occurs, closes the picture in about twelve hours.

It is unfortunate that at the present time there is no "specific" treatment for rattler snake or copperhead poisoning. The poisons of all these serpents are of a protein nature, acid, and in the case of the cobra, and a few others, anti-toxines have been very successfully employed. The difficulty, however, is that the anti-toxines is not at hand soon enough after the bite to accomplish a cure which would readily be expected. If the injections are prompt. There are inherent technical difficulties to be overcome in making anti-toxins for the rattler, and besides the demand now is not so large as to warrant the expenditure of time and money, along that line. The result is that he who would be cured of rattler snake, or copperhead bites must act quickly and on his own resources.

As has been said, the bite is usually on an extremity. A tourniquet should be immediately fitted above the wound by a handkerchief in which is enclosed the usual stick for increasing the pressure by twisting. This stops the flow of the poison along the lymph channels and veins into the system. This sort of pressure cannot be kept up more than half an hour without fear of gangrene. If no surgeon is at hand to act quickly, the pressure causing a partial anaesthesia of the part, one may take a sharp jack knife and freely slip open the flesh around the point where the fang has entered.

Better, if possible, is to remove a portion of flesh entirely, leaving a hole about the size of a thimble where flesh is thick enough to allow. This procedure is best when employed quickly. The wound can then be packed with any one of a number of different substances, potassium permanganate being the best, if procurable. The wound should be allowed to bleed freely. If not, the acidity of the venom can be neutralized by any alkali like baking soda or caustic soda. By this time the half hour leisure is nearly up, and the next move to prevent the little poison which remains in the lymphatic channels from working itself further and further upward.

There are two "do's" for the person who treats snake bites. One is not to suck the wound, and the other is not to give the patient whiskey, coffee, strong and black, is much better and safer.

There is historic reason for the physician to be interested in snakes. Long before the birth of Christ, when an ascupulus of Kna and Kaidos lived and gave to humanity the first inkling of what scientific (renovation) medical practice should be, he adopted the staff and the snake as symbols of the healing art, an insignia to this day seen on the collars of medical officers of the army. But while the insignia has remained much the same down through the centuries, the practice has advanced until now like Hezekiah, the medical man no longer either uses whiskey or saline for snake bites.

VAST AMOUNT OF LAND IDLE.

L. F. Post Speaks Before Labor University Course League

Washington, July 15.—Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of labor, spoke last evening at the Public Library before the Labor University Course League, which presented its fourth of a series of lectures preliminary to the opening of a university in the fall. His subject was "How Shall We Pay for the War?"

"The only justification for private ownership of land," Mr. Post said, "is that the man who owns it shall put it to its best use, and if he doesn't do this he is guilty of a breach of trust."

He declared the public has no conception of the amount of farming land out of use in this country. A large portion of this land, he said is under the control of large concerns, who are holding the land for increase of value.

Representative Sinclair of North Dakota will address the league next Monday night. His subject will be the purpose of the non-partisan movement of North Dakota.

WORKING IN HAUNTS OF MAJESTY

Coblenz, July 16.—American soldiers employed in the United States post-office in Coblenz have been sorting mail in school rooms which during the early days of the war, were used by the then German Emperor for holding councils of war with his chiefs.

Soon after the beginning of the war in 1914, the Emperor was in Coblenz several months, spending several hours each day with army generals who were then using the school house as an army headquarters. The school building is near the center of town and several large rooms on the first floor were taken over for the army postoffice a few days after the Americans took over the Coblenz bridge-head last December.

Bridgers, Receiver of the Roanoke River Railway Company, and Commissioner, appointed by the Court, will, on July 26, 1915, at 12:00 o'clock M., at the Court House door in the town of Henderson, North Carolina, offer for sale to the highest bidder, subject to confirmation by the Court, the line of railroad of the Roanoke River Railway Company extending from Manson, Warren County, N. C., to Townsville, Vance County, N. C., together with all lands acquired and used by said railroad and all the rights of way, easements, roadbeds, tracks, station houses, warehouses and erections and fixtures of every kind and all such real and personal property, rights of way, easements and appurtenances as may be germane to or necessary to the construction, operation or maintenance of said railroad, also all engines, cars, rolling stock of every kind, tools, machinery of every kind, rails, spikes, joint fittings, timbers, ties, superstructure, and material of every kind now owned and possessed by said railroad company, also all furniture, safes, books, accounts, maps, surveys, charts and office equipment belonging to said railroad company, also all materials and supplies of every character owned by said railroad company together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging or in any wise appurtenant and also all the rights and powers, privileges and franchises of or belonging to said railroad company.

J. H. BRIDGERS, Receiver of Roanoke River Railway Company and Commissioner.

MINIMUM WAGE FOR WOMEN FIXED AT $16.50

Washington, July 15.—The minimum wage for women employed in the mercantile industry in the District of Columbia will be $16.50 a week, if the unanimous recommendation of the conference that has had the matter under consideration is approved by the minimum wage board.

This finding, just announced, will mean a considerable boost in the pay of women, as the board has ascertained that only about half of the 409 women employees of mercantile establishments here receive $12 a week or less, and about one-fourth reach the rating of $16. Before the minimum rate can become effective it must be considered at a public hearing, the date of which must be advertised for a month. Afterward, the board will issue a formal order which, under the law, cannot become effective for two months. This will make the minimum wage operative about November 1.

"It is a happy circumstance that the conferees in the matter of the minimum wage for the mercantile industry of the District of Columbia reached a unanimous agreement," observed Charles J. Columbus, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, who has labored with the employers' conferees through this and other minimum wage matters.

"I am sure that the respective conferees representing the public, the employees and employers are to be congratulated upon the great amount of labor and intelligent consideration that was given this important matter."

"The Merchants and Manufacturers' Association not only indorsed and helped to bring the minimum-wage law into existence, but it is, naturally, taking a keen interest in its interpretation and will be none the less vigilant in its enforcement. In my contact with the merchants of Washington, big or little, I find a unanimity of even sentimental interest in regard to the employees, and the idea of a minimum wage appealed to them, and I am sure there will be no serious differences of opinion on the part of any merchant as to the equity of the present finding."

"Business men realize that the value of a dollar has depreciated and are more than pleased that the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association helped to put the minimum wage commission law through, so that the needs of today might be more equitably considered.

"Service in mercantile life has wonderful attractions, and I feel sure that the operation of the minimum wage law will tend to develop an even greater state of efficiency and certainly should attract the more efficient to this line of employment.

"Efficiency is the watchword of business, and I am confident that the business interests, without respect to class, will respond to the ruling of the conferees in a whole-hearted and co-operative spirit."

RUN THEIR OWN BREWERY

London, July 15.—Because the coal miners of Wales can not buy enough beer, owing to the shortage, they are buying a brewery. A company has been formed to purchase and operate it and the capital of $100,000 is being subscribed by various miners' clubs, which are taking out shares in the concern in proportion to membership.

Western Electric POWER and LIGHT

Here is the outfit that so many farmers have been waiting for

A three horsepower gas engine direct connected to an electric generator, and fitted with a pulley that makes the engine available for any other power need on the farm.

DON'T make the mistake of buying a plant that is not large enough. You want to be able to use your lights and at the same time perhaps several of the labor saving devices that are making electricity so useful and so popular on the farm.

This new Western Electric plant has power plenty of it. The engine burns gasoline or kerosene; is throttle governed and air cooled. It automatically stops when the batteries are fully charged and runs without noise. Small motors for pumps, cream separator, fanning mill, etc. can be operated directly from the generator, thereby saving the battery for use at night.

In compactness, ease of operation and appearance, the new Western Electric outfit meets every desire. More than forty years' electric manufacturing experience is back of it.

Before you buy any plant see the Western Electric man. He can show you this machine, and other sizes and types with and without engines. There is a Western Electric plant for every possible farm condition, and you can make your entire equipment "Western Electric"—Motors, Water System, Milking Machines, etc.—to save labor on the farm; as well as Irons, Vacuum Cleaners, Washing Machines and other electrical helps to save time and labor in the home.
