DR. GRAYSON REFUSED TO GIVE ENDORSEMENT TO HIS SUGGESTION

President Greatly Angered When He Had From His Secretary of State Definite Assurance of What He Considered Disloyalty; Illness Probably Prevented Immediate Dismissal of Lansing From Cabinet; Mrs. Wilson With Loving Courage Stood By President Nobly During His Western Tour

WOODROW WILSON AS I KNOW HIM BY JOSEPH P. TUMULTY. (25th Installment.) CHAPTER XXI. THE WESTERN TRIP.

Tentative plans for a Western trip began to be formed in the White House because of the urgent insistence from Democratic friends on the Hill that nothing could win the fight for the League of Nations except a direct appeal to the country by the President in person. Admiral Grayson, the President's physician and consistent friend, who knew his condition and the various physical crises through which he had passed here and on the other side, from some of which he had not yet recovered, stood firm in his resolve that West, even intimating to me that the President's life might now be imperiled if his advice were disregarded. Indeed it needed, not the trained eye of a physician to see that the man whom the Senators were now advising to make a "swing around the circle," was on the verge of a nervous breakdown. More than once since his return from the Peace Conference, I had urged him to take a needed rest; to get away from the turmoil of Washington and recuperate; but he spurned this advice and resolved to go through to the end. No argument of ours could draw him away from his duties, which now involved not only the fight for the ratification of the treaty, but the threatened railway strike, with its attendant evils to the country, and added administrative burdens growing out of the partisanship fight which was being waged in Congress for the ostensible purpose of reducing the high cost of living. Ready For Any Sacrifice. One day, after Democratic Senators had been urging the Western trip, I took leave to say to the President that, in his condition, disastrous consequences might result if he should follow their advice. But he dismissed my solicitude, saying in a weary way: "I know that I am at the end of my tether, but my friends on the Hill say that the trip is necessary to save the treaty, and I am willing to make whatever personal sacrifice is required, for if the treaty should be defeated, God only knows what would happen to the world as a result of it. In the presence of the great tragedy which now faces the world, no decent man can count his own personal fortunes in the reckoning. Even though, in my condition, it might mean the giving up of my life, I will gladly make the sacrifice to save the treaty."
