The Trypograph.

JOHNSON'S A new instrument for multiplying copies of letters, etc., has been introduced into England under the name of the trypograph. It seems a modification of Edison's electric pen. A sheet of special paper is placed on a perforating tablet, and the writing is done with a firm hand and a steel-pointed stylus.--This has the effect of picreing the paper with a number of very minute perforations, through which it is possible to force ink on to the sheet of paper placed beneath. The making of the steneil is the most important part of the operation. A little practice will show the proper amount of pressure to put upon the stylus and the cast at way of writing; and this once accomplished, it will be understood that the number of capies is limited only by the duration of the stencils, which can be stored away for future use, and brought out as required. No press is needed; all that is wanted is something with a flat enrinee, the means of holding the steneil finaly, and a squeegoe for scraping the ink over the surfres.

A Decayed American Industry. Before the advent of cheap estion the production and manufacture of flax were important industries in this country. In 1810, when the population of the country was but little more than 7,000,000, there were produced in the United States over 21,000,000 yards of flaxen cloth made in families. At the present time, when the population of the country is believed to be 50,000,000, the total annual production of flux and linen fabrics is probably not over 5,000. 000 yards, and not a yard of fine linen is made in the country.
