JOHN AND I.

"Come, John," said 1, cheerfully, "it really is time to go; if you stay any longer I shall be afraid to come down and lock the door after you."

My visitor rose a proceeding that always reminded me of the genii emerging from the copper vessel, as be measured six foot three-and stool looking reproachfully down at me. "You are in a great hurry to get rid of me," he said. Now I didn't agree with him, for he-had made his usual call of two hours and a half; having, in country phrase, taken to "sitting up" with me so literally that I was frequently at my wits' end to suppress the yawn that I knew would bring a troop after it.

He was a fine, manly looking fellow, this John Cranford, old for his agewhich was the rather boyish period of twenty-two-and every way worthy of being loved. But I didn't love him. Cranford. Life with him would be I was seven years his senior; when instead of letting the worm of concealment prey on his damask cheek, he ventured to tell his love for my mature self, I remorselessly seized an English prayer book, and pointed sternly to the clause, "A man may not marry his grandmother." That was three years ago, and I added encouragingly

"Beside, John, you are a child, and don't know your own mind."

"If a man of nineteen doesn't know his own mind," remonstrated my lover. "I would like to know who should-But I will wait for you seven years, if we look upon you quite as one of the you say so-fourteen-as Jacoh did for | family Rachel."

The boy's eyes flashed indignantlyand before I could divine his intention he had lifted me from the spot where but to John's father, sitting lonely in to the sofa, at the other end of the room.

"I could almost find it in my heart to shake you!" he muttered, as he set me down with emphasis,

This was rather like the courtship or promised to be quite exciting.

"Don't do that again," I said with dignity, when I recovered my breath. "Will you marry me?" asked John,

somewhat threateningly,

"Not just at present," I replied.

"The great, handsome fellow," I thought, as he paced the floor restless: ly, "why couldn't he fall in love with some girl of fifteen, instead of setting his affections on an old maid like me? I don't want the boy on my hands, and won't have him!"

"As to your being twenty-six," pursued John, in answer to my thoughts, "You say it's down in the family Bible and I suppose it must be so; but no one would believe it; and I don't care If you are forty. You look like a girl of sixteen, and you are the only woman I shall ever love."

1 rattled the cups and saucers angrily; and my thoughts flew off, not to John, I stood, and carried me infant fashion the library furnished after my suggestion. Wasn't it, after all, my duty to marry the family generally?

The house was finished and moved into, and John spent his evenings with me. I used to get dreadfully tired of him. He was too devoted to be at all William of Normandy, and matters interesting, and I had reached that state of feeling which, if summar ly ordered to take my choice between him and the gallows, I would have prepared myself for the latter with a sort of alarrity.

I locked the door upon John on the yealed. evening in question, when I had finally got rid of him, with these things in full force; and I meditated while un. dressing on some desperate move that would bring matters to a crisis. But the boy had been roused at last

He, too, had reflected in the watches of the night; and next day 1 received quite a dignified letter from him, tell. ing me that business called him from the city for three or four weeks, and that possibly on his return I might appreciate his devotion better.

I felt inexpressibly relieved. It appeared to me the most sensible movement that John had made in the whole course of our acquaintance, and I began to breathe with more freedom.

Time flew, however, and the three soft-hearted and weakly promise then John's return. He wrote to me, but the young of both seves at the present ed; and I scarcely knew what to make
