A Story of New Mexico.

BY B. J. MORTAINE,

In New Mexico the principal natural growths of the soil are eachs and the "greaser." The cactus is possible or even probable elsewhere. The "greaser" is a New Mexican product, pure and simple. He flourishes as an exotic, translated from old Mexico, and having undergone deterioration by the transfer.

There is a strain of American blood somewhere concealed about him, to the most part, but he is ashamed of may such admixture. "Se "greaser" is a Latin to the core, a degraded Lettin, with a full and perfect knowledge of the vic s of two of the contiments and an atter willingness to be ignorant of all other things. Amerienns in New Mexico tolerate him us a necessary evil, just as they belerate Chinemen in California. He is cheap, even if he is medy, and he makes farming possible by his exec dingly low self-valuation.

Sometimes he shuttles off his servility and becomes a Spaniard. Then it requires nerve to deal with him, and also a quick land on the trigger. I became aware of that fact a few months ago, when I was staying with Juck Henderson.

Jack went out to New Mexico five years ago with a bride and a dream and $3,000. When I saw him the bride had become a mother to the extent of Jack, Jr., aged 3, the dream woman the verse of evanescence, and the $3,000 had gone, dark had a it of on what purported excatually to become a fruit farm, when a company had worried out an impossible religition scheme, thirtymiles from Santa Fe and seven miles from a white man. There were for mountains to the cost, with white tops that purpled at sundown. All round him was the dreary prairie, monotonous as the sea, nade beyond mile of brown purficed grass, with here and there's breach of enwing bushes, Rowls, in the Eurobah sense of the term, there were none. We rodo to Mrs. Jack's heroism. In the instant the place over the luked and tracks, scentificity without end or object, past the greasers' "debues," as they call their little homely must huts, postmyriads of prairie dogs, scampering into their holes as we approached, And then at last we reached a long, low farmhouse of planks, sitting in ed his eye. the malst of a vegetable patchethat yellow leaf. The Streets of Pekin. I wish you could see one of these Pekinese streets, and the queer sights upon it, writes Frank G. Carpenter. They are filled with stream of yellow humanity of all classes, ages and sexes. You pass gorgeous officials on Monzolian ponies, the backs of some of which are decorated with arrows, and you know they are on their way to the shooting matches outside of Pekin. You go by silk-gowned mandarins in carts who seewl at you as you peep into the little glass windows in the walls of A leathern thong was girted around their vehicles. You see scholars with his elbows, pinioning his arms to his spectacles as hig as trade dollars, and everywhere you go you are assaulted the pointed of Jose's saddle, and Jose by beggars. I remember one boy with a fiendish sheen beneath his weather was bitterly cold, and I shiveted in my fur ulster. This boy was dack had his fingers on his revolver maked to the waist, and his arms had been cut off at the shoulders. He me, switching his body this way and that to show me his mutilation. I was glad to give him two or three cents to be freed of the sight. Another begger, who has long been in Petrin, is a man who has an iron skewor thrust through his cheek. This skewer is a foot long, and is about as big around as your little fluger. He twests it this way and that and keeps the flesh ranged and sore. He bants on a gong as he goes through the streets, and you are glied to pay him to keep out of your way. There is one gate in Pekin which is always crowded with beginns, and one of the finest bridges of the city, a structure of marble, has been given up entirely ing from the barrel as it long from to beggars. Counting Money.

Peculiar and Exacting Duties of the Position.

The amount of money that pass day by day through the hands of paying tellers of New York banks is some thing enormous. On the first day of the month recently at the close of the day's lossiness the sixty-five bunks that are members of the New York Clearing House held in legal tenders upwards of $132,000,000 in legal tenders
