

ALL North Carolinians should have sufficient patriotism to work together and vote together for the preservation of the best interests of their State. We are all interested in the welfare of this happy and fertile State, and should earnestly desire the best government all the people can have.

Without fear of our own people, we will assert to the people of this State that they do not wish to have their State government managed in the best manner. Probably all parties will assent to this proposition, and they do not wish to have their State government managed in the best manner.

Now has North Carolina the best? Did they not have a better government than we have now? Did they not have a better government than we have now?

With these views, the people of North Carolina should call a State convention to discuss the "free silver" question. In the first place, no man should be more emphatic in favor of the silver than that of our own convention, and would that more of our people, throughout the State, were of the same mind.

The lease of the North Carolina railroad is now the chief topic of discussion in this State, by reason of the fact that it can now be sold for more than for it has already been sold. The contract has been sold, and the money delivered. Whether the contract is a good one for the State, only can prove. It is the best that could have been made, as every man knows. While the contract for the State is a good one, it is not the best that could have been made.

great importance there should have been some advertisement for some party leaders. An opportunity should have been offered all other railroad corporations and individuals to take their bids and the contract should have been given to the highest bidder. In any other case, it would be a waste of money. The State would be better off if it had a better government than we have now. The State would be better off if it had a better government than we have now.

There were several changes in the officers of the company, caused by the death of some of the officers. The company was organized in 1861, and since that time it has been through many changes. The company was organized in 1861, and since that time it has been through many changes.

A Timely Explanation.

It is a common mistake to suppose that the only way to get the best of the enemy is to fight him. The only way to get the best of the enemy is to fight him. The only way to get the best of the enemy is to fight him.
