You can judge of that for yourself you you have heard the contents of a feerament which I have brought with to read to you.

The day following that upon which standard received the information that standard with applied to Benjaman for a loan, the rascally broker made his appearance at the office of the money-reader grouppily to the hour of his last visit. Mr. Benjaman was awaiting him, after the civilities of the day were exchanged, Prats said.

"I hope you have the money ready for mo?"

Yes. It is in the safe, vorder."

Thus answered Paxton calmly, and he drow from his pocket the confession of the man whom Kredge had bribed to keep his secret.

The prisoner watched him with an interpretable well face.

Then he produced a package from a small valide, and, opening it, disclosus several bundles of bank-notes.

Benjaman watched them eagerly, and his eyes famed with the light of triumph as Pratt proceeded to count the money upon the fable.

You will find the amount all right, I think, he said, after running over the bills, and he possibled them to Benjaman.

The aged Hebrew counted the money carefully.

The amount is correct. Seventy-seven thousand dollars, nevertling to Pratts on thousand this time, and I'd do was a supreme incoment of six in. The amount is correct. Seventy-seven thousand dollars," he said.
The reader will remember that one thousand dollars, according to Fratt's statement, had been paid to the myserious man called Garnar.

Benjaman after counting the money, matched it up, and placed it in his safe.
Then, instead of taking out the gold to pay Pratt, he suddenly locked thesafe and turned away.

Pratt's eyes were riveted upon him, and he did not understand the meaning of this.

"I want to introduce you to these gentiemen, said the money-icider.

There was a screen across the office, and, pushing it aside, he added." There are my witnesses!

Fratt recolled with a sudden exclamation, as he beheld mether Benjaman, the exact counterpart of the man to whom he had paid the marked noney, and four of Benjaman's cierks, who had been concealed behind the series.

Fratt glanced in amazement from the man to whom he had paid the marked noney, to the other lienjaman.

What infernal trickery is this: If you have betrayed me, I'll have your life! turning to the Benjaman to whom he had given the marked money.

Who are you? continued Pratt, advanting threateningly.

Stand back! "shouted the other.

As he spoke he saidently removed a beard and wig, which he had worn to impersonate Benjaman, and Paxton, the detective, stood revealed.

At Stanmore's request the veteran had assumed the charactor of Kenjaman the moneylender.
