

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1888.

H. A. LONDON, Editor.

THE burial of Ensign Worth Bagley at Raleigh, on last Monday, was attended with ceremonies and honors never before seen in this State at the burial of any of North Carolina's most distinguished sons.

His body arrived there on last Sunday night, and, after remaining at his mother's house until midday on Monday, was carried to the Capitol where it lay in state until 5 o'clock, when it was placed near the south front of the Capitol, and the funeral obsequies were held in the open air for no church or other building could have contained the immense multitude that had assembled to pay their last tribute of respect.

In this vast audience were our State's highest officers, our most distinguished citizens, and also the poor and humble men and women who had known and loved the dead hero when a boy. All business was suspended in the city and many stores and other buildings were draped in mourning. The longest funeral procession ever seen in Raleigh accompanied the young hero to his last resting place. In it were about three hundred from the public schools of the city, and in contrast to that peaceful part of the procession were the long lines of soldiers—the volunteers from Camp Grimes—in their bright uniforms and warlike equipments. And in the procession were old Confederates and old Union soldiers marching together and uniting the "Blue and the Gray" in dying honor to this son of a Confederate soldier who had died under the stars and stripes.

The floral offerings were more numerous and beautiful than ever before seen at any funeral in this state. And they were sent not only from towns in this state, but some were sent from other states.

At the close of the solemn exercises and after the military escort had fired the last volley over the lower decked grave, the bugler stood by the new marble grave, and, as the last rays of the setting sun were descending into twilight, amid profound silence he "blew taps," which sounded like a nation's wail or last lament over its dead young hero.

The Populist State convention met at Raleigh on last Tuesday afternoon, and it was anything but a love fest. Quarrelling began as soon as it was called to order, and, with a recess for supper, continued nearly all night trying to effect a permanent organization. Butler and Skinner were the leaders of the two factions.

One very striking and significant feature of this convention was the prominent part played in it by Congressman Harry Skinner and the "Pritchard Populists," who last year were a bitter denominated by their leader Populists. After Skinner had succeeded in getting nineteen Populist members of the last Legislature to vote for Senator Pritchard he and they were denounced by the other Populists as traitors and unworthy of further fellowship with true silver Populists. Indeed they were "read out" of the party by Butler and his followers, and yet it now looks like Skinner and the Pritchard Populists have more influence with the Populist party than Butler and his followers!

There was probably never before any State convention of any party so completely controlled by selfish officeholders. They chiefly composed the delegations of many counties, and controlled the proceedings of the convention from beginning to end. The hard working taxpayers of the country seemed to be unknown and unrecognized. And yet our Populist friends were once so bitter in their denunciations of political bosses and ring rule!

A monument will be erected in memory of Ensign Worth Bagley by popular subscription. As soon as the wires flashed the sad news of his death a popular subscription was begun at Raleigh to erect a suitable monument in his honor, and from all over the state subscriptions poured in. No one was allowed to contribute over one dollar, and many children contributed their nickels.

ENSIGN WORTH BAGLEY.

The authority-decided Ensign Worth Bagley, whose death thoughts.

The first death-sacrifice of the North Carolinians, according to the records of the Confederacy, was honored with such distinction as the name of the young hero to his last resting place. In it were about three hundred from the public schools of the city, and in contrast to that peaceful part of the procession were the long lines of soldiers—the volunteers from Camp Grimes—in their bright uniforms and warlike equipments. And in the procession were old Confederates and old Union soldiers marching together and uniting the "Blue and the Gray" in dying honor to this son of a Confederate soldier who had died under the stars and stripes.
