

The last Legislature passed a law directing that the 12th day of October in each and every year be observed as North Carolina Day...

This is an excellent idea and all private as well as public schools should earnestly strive to carry it into effect. Let every school, both public and private, appropriately celebrate this "North Carolina Day"...

Nearly every school child—even in North Carolina—knows more of the Revolutionary history of Massachusetts than of North Carolina, simply because greater efforts are made to teach and perpetuate it...

Gov. Aycock very properly believes in giving pardon and applications for pardons, which require action of the application to be published in the county where the convict was so on record, giving full statement of the case...

Gov. Aycock has adopted a course in this respect which is in striking contrast to that of Gov. Russell, who would not even give to the accomplices the names of criminals pardoned by him.

A strike is now on that has rarely been equalled in the United States. Indeed it may be the most important that has been known in this country.

Hats and bonnets for females are the latest fad. In the style of the North, where the hat seems to be more oppressive than at the South, many horses wear hats or bonnets to protect them from the blistering sun. And various and various are the styles of these hats and bonnets. It must be a funny sight.
