To Devise Ways and Means of Building 500 Miles of Good Roads in the Appalachian Mountains.

Asheville, N. C .- "There is no magical way of getting good roads and the people must go down in their pockets and bear the expenses if they want them," said Governor Kitchin of North Carolina, in welcoming the delegates to the Southern Appalachian Good Roads' Congress, in session here. Governor Kitchin added that the question of good roads was not a new one: that the Romans had built good roads-roads that has lasted more than 1,000 years. He said that the Romans appreciated the value of good highways, not only for purposes of war, but for the development of commerce. Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt of North Carolina, was elected permanent chairman of the congress, and E. J. Watson of South Carolina was chosen secretary. Dr. Pratt, in opening the congress, stated that the purpose of the gathering was to devise ways and means for building 500 miles of good roads in the Appalachian mountains, with connecting links leading to South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and Virginia.
