The progressives fear what they characterize as an effort to "pack" some of the more important committees, and if this is attempted, they declare they will expose the situation on the floor of the Senate and let the Democrats of the country understand what the conditions in the party in the United States Senate are. It remains to be seen, however, if there is any justification for these fears on the part of the progressives.

Democrats' Request Heeded. Acting for the minority, Senator Martin has been insisting that the Democratic representation on the big committees be increased. The Democommittees be increased. The Democrats made a gain of nine votes in the Senate, and by reason of this increase their demand would seem to be just The Republicans were placed in an awkward position, as they are con-fronted with the demands of their own progressives for recognition on the committees that control the large affairs of the Senate.

After a conference between Mr. Gal-linger, chairman of the Republican Committee on Committees, and other eading Republicans, the request of the Democrats was complied with. To counter balance that increase, however, consider to their own side of the column, and thereby make room for progressive Republicans. The preponderance of organization Republicans in the committee of cans in the committees, as at present constituted, makes them rather onesided, and there is plenty of room for more Democratic members.

Of the big committees, the following consist of eight Republicans and five Democrats—privileges and elections, appropriations, and interstate commerce. The committees on finance, foreign relations, military affairs and postoffices and post roads, stand nine to five. The judiciary and public buildings and grounds consist of nine Republicans and six Democrats; commerce, eleven to six, and naval affairs,
