The French market, where four generations of housewives have bargained and bought meats and vegetables, will soon have passed. The New Orleans sanitarians won in their fight for conditions that will insure purer food, and the market, part of which has stood since its first establishment in 1801, is to be replaced by a remodeled structure, with white-tiled stalls and modern screening instead of the open-to-fly booths a century old. The renovation of the market has begun. For years the old market, the first the Spaniards erected in the latter part of the 18th century, in Decatur street, then the levee, has been sought by painter and writer for its
