Two hundred Italians employed at Mathis Shoals in the construction of the Georgia Power company's new dam across Tallulah river, after imbibing a little too much of the "overjoyful," attacked a young man named Grover Shirley. They knocked him into the river, then fired several pistol shots at him. Shirley has not since been found. A difficulty growing out of the same transaction was renewed in which a dozen or more of the citizens of Rabun were accosted by the foreigners with rifles, pistols and shotguns. They quickly retreated, taking shelter behind buildings, rocks and trees.
