THINK OF OTHERS

I took special notice of two young men the other morning, driving along one of our streets in a car, and their demeanor was worthy of a great regard. They showed good horse sense, for they were travelling so slow that passers-by would not be choked to death by dirt and dust. It is astonishing to see how little respect some people have for others. The people who live in this town breathe more dirt than they do pure air. If everybody would drive slow while coming into town or going out, and if our little respects of the game was the pitching and hitting of J. Bell and fielding of B. Utley for Moncure and the all-round work of Phil Harring-ton for Brickhaven.

HOMEY PHILOSUPHY

Here was young Jim Jones just went into his back garden t see how his grape vines were coming along, and every one of them was dead-not a leaf in sight. He was sure he had doped the whole thing out so he would have a wonderful grape juice crop this year. He got the finest vines, planted them with the greatest care, and then gave them a dose of manure he was sure would make them come up great. In the winter months he dug around them, and gave them more manure to keep them going through the cold spell. "Burned up," remarked old Jake when he saw them. "Ain't nothin' better'n manure, but too much kills. Plants are like humans. Grapes most of all-grow best when they have to fight, and don't get rich food too easy,"
