Mining German Potash

Good Healthy Crops

The South learned years ago that Kainit and the other German Potash Salts prevented Cotton Rust and other plant diseases, and at the same time greatly increased the yield.

Scientific investigations now show that both Potash and Magnesia are helpful in combating plant diseases.

All the German Potash Salts that are used in Cotton fertilizers contain soluble magnesia.

If you will insist on having your fertilizer contain at least 5 per cent of Potash derived from Genuine German Potash Salts, you will secure at the same time enough magnesia to insure against plant diseases due to magnesia hunger.

For Tobacco, and for those Fruits which are injured by Chlorin, the fertilizer should carry 10 per cent of Potash, derived from Sulfate of Potash or from Sulfate of Potash Magnesia.

Use the latter if your Tobacco leaves are not sound.

LAUGH AT DESERT

Fearless Men in Motorcars Add Region to Civilization.

French Expedition Crossed the Sahara in Safety, Where White Men Never Had Been Seen.

The conquest of the Sahara desert by means of fast tractors and motorcars is today an accomplished fact. It is regarded in Paris government, commercial and military circles as possibly the most useful exploration expedition of the Twentieth century.

News has just been received in Paris that the fleet of small tractors and motorcars, which left Algeria December 15 is nearing Timbuctoo on the Niger river. This means that they have cut across the Sahara through sections never before seen by white men, a distance of about twenty-two hundred miles—almost as easily as a New York tourist travels to Denver, camping nights by the wayside.

Carrying reserves of gasoline and water, the small cars have completely relegated the desert camel into oblivion as a much overrated means of travel and have pioneered a trail which promises France as much wealth as she may lose in trying to force Germany to pay reparations.

This expedition means the linking of the rich Congo and Niger river regions, which lie under French protection, with the Mediterranean, thus making possible the quick shipments of the resources of these almost untouched districts to France and Europe.

Equatorial Africa comprises one and a third million square miles. The population is eight million, which, added to twelve million in occidental Africa, indicates what the development of such a railway would mean. These territories hold unlimited lumber, with 90,000 square miles in occidental Africa alone. This easy motor expedition has shown the French government that it will be possible to supply Europe with cotton, lumber, tobacco and ivory.

The government awaited with the greatest interest the news of the safe arrival of the explorers from across the desert wastes. The greatest danger lay in the 300-mile stretch of waterless country in the south mid-desert region, known as Hoggar. The information here shows that the cars crossed the space without trouble at high speed in less than two days.

French military authorities believe it will be possible to link up stations by small, fast motor tractors, and thus systematically eradicate the desert marauders. Flying columns of cars, as shown by the expedition, are capable of negotiating the soft, shifting sands at a much greater speed than the fastest camels, military men believe, and spell the end of the romantic sheik, who leads his marauders abroad against helpless caravans.

The fear of Georges Haardt and Audoin Deubreuil, the leaders of the expedition, that it would be captured by the bandits proved to be groundless, as the cars proved so rapid as to easily outdistance the camel-mounted bandits. The machine guns they carried proved to be useless except for an occasional burst of fire at a jackal.

These men, despite the fact that their mission was carried out safely and with a speed unexpected even to themselves, in face of the highly advertised dangers from bloodthirsty bandits, are today national heroes in France. The government in the colonies ordered the greatest reception for them that Timbuctoo ever accorded, and on their return to Paris they received the highest honors.

The Game Hog.

Along in November Freddy began wishing for an air rifle for Christmas. He wished for it when dad was around, he wished for it before grandma, before big brother and in the hearing of anyone else who might have any influence with Santa Claus in the matter. His wishing was successful and the first thing Freddy spied on Christmas morning was the coveted air rifle. He dressed hurriedly, bolted breakfast and grabbed up the gun and started "hunting." Two squares up the street was a little park with sparrows flitting about. Freddy started gunning for sparrows. He shot and shot without hitting a bird, but he wasn't disheartened. Just before noon one day mother was astonished to hear Freddy come in the front door crying.

"Why, Freddy?" she exclaimed. "Have you hurt yourself with your new gun?"

"No," Freddy sobbed.

"Then what is the matter?"

"Oh, mamma!" Freddy cried, "I killed one! I killed one!"—Kansas City Star.

The Wrong Man.

A traveler rushed up to a stranger at a railway station just as the train was about to start, and asked: "Are you going on this train?" "I am!" was the reply. "Well, my friend," said the traveler, "you might do me a favor. I have two big trunks, and they always make me pay extra for one of them. Would you mind taking one, it will cost you nothing?"

"But I haven't a ticket!" said the stranger.

"I thought you said you were going by this train!" exclaimed the traveler.

"Yes, I am!" was the answer. "I'm one of the company's inspectors!"
