LIGHTNING BURNS
OFF HIS WHISKERS

Farmer Struck While on Plow Has Narrow Escape.

Alliance, Neb.—Struck on the head by lightning, Joe W. Kennedy, forty-five, farmer, still lives to tell the tale and the attending physician says he will recover.

The lightning struck Kennedy above the right ear, burned the crown of his hat, scorched the hair from his head and plowed its way across his cheek.

Kennedy was knocked unconscious and was found a half hour later by his wife and daughter. The lightning put out of commission most of the telephones in the neighborhood.

The course of the lightning could be clearly traced from where it struck Kennedy to where it leaped from his body. A full set of whiskers that adorned his face went up in smoke.

Woman on 17th Annual Hike Across Bridge

New York.—The Manhattan bridge has at least one true friend and admirer—Mrs. Joseph Woolston, Union City, N. J.

"I have done it again," said Mrs. Woolston. "You know I was the first woman to walk across the Manhattan bridge, and since then I have walked across it, rain or shine, every year on the anniversary of the opening of the footpath."

Mrs. Woolston was asked the reason for her attachment to the structure. Had she lived formerly in the neighborhood of the span?

"No," she said. "I used to live in this city, but that was years before the bridge was opened. But the day they opened it I came to New York alone to be at the ceremonies. When the bluecoats took down the bars I started across."

"When I got to the middle of the bridge a big, fine policeman said to me: 'Madame, you are the first woman to walk across Manhattan bridge. If I were you I would celebrate that by coming here every year on July 18 and walking across it.'"

"Since then," continued Mrs. Woolston, "I have not missed a year. I used to walk over and get a drink of water at the little fountain on Nassau street, at the Brooklyn end, but I could not get that drink today because the fountain is gone."

Shuttleless Loom Is Invented by German

London.—A shuttleless loom hitherto regarded as an impossibility, has been invented by a German named Gobler, according to a report from Berlin and has been already thoroughly tested and proved feasible in German factories before being publicly announced.

The claim is made that production is quicker and safer, that the number of operatives is reduced, that the complicated preliminary steps before winding the threads will be obviated and the cost of the loom construction greatly lessened.

Lancashire has not yet heard of the new invention and is not likely to adopt it unless its weaving skill, handed down through generations, is equally applicable to the new machine as with the old well-tried Arkwright loom.

Blade in Man's Skull 28 Years Is Removed

Birmingham, Ala.—A piece of knife blade two inches long was removed by surgeons at Opelika, Ala., from the head of R. P. Waller of Auburn, after having been in Waller's head for the last 28 years. The operation is considered a remarkable one.

Waller said that when he was about ten years of age he was stabbed with a knife in the hands of a drunken man. At the time Waller was stabbed it was said by doctors that only an open wound was left. This quickly healed.

For many years Waller suffered with severe headaches, and did not know the cause. Recently an X-ray examination was made of Waller's head and the piece of broken knife-blade was discovered. The operation was a success, and Waller says his headaches have disappeared and that he feels better than for years.

PREHISTORIC BOY PLAYED MARBLES

Toys Found With a Skeleton Buried 2,000 Years.

Chillicothe, Ohio.—The skeleton of a twelve-year-old boy, with a number of marbles, prized relics of childhood, were removed from the Brier mound of the Seip group, near Bainbridge, eighteen miles west of here, the other day.

This is the second of a group of burials found in the rear of the mound, where last year the "great pearl burial" was unearthed and where this summer five cremated burials, with the usual finds of black, tan and white wildcat jaws and marine tortoise shell combs were disclosed.

The boy's body had been interred in a cabin-like structure and was covered with a canopy, the mold of which was found. The body had been clothed in a garment of woven fabric. The grave contained many unusual ceremonial specimens, H. S. Shetrone, curator of the Ohio museum, said.

"We found a number made from corlite, a fine, close grained stone which takes a very high polish, engraved in beautiful designs. They had been placed there reverently by loving hands," he reported. "We believe that the game of marbles was a time-honored pastime even in the days of the Mound Builders. These little fellows probably lived more than 2,000 years ago," he continued, for the first time hinting at his idea of the age of the mounds.

Besides the marbles there were found a stone carved in the shape of a turkey vulture, carefully cut down to the feather markings; another stone carved like a lizard, with a tall resembling the rattles of a rattlesnake; beads, green chlorite resembling turquoise, many well-cut mica designs, teeth of raccoon, fox, wolf, mountain lion, bear and other wild animals which roamed the forest, pierced so that they could be strung and worn as ornaments; woven fabric, obsidian spear points and a few bits of copper.

Papa Bobs Mamma's Hair; Uses a Stone to Do Job

London.—Women have their hair shingled among the Australian aborigines in the region of Gregory sea and it is a husband's prerogative to cut his wife's hair with sharpened stones.

Such is the story of hairdressing in Australia which Michael Terry, explorer, has brought back to London after a trip through little-known parts of northern Australia.

Female hair is much prized by the aborigines, as it is used in weaving belts and making various sorts of ornaments.

Rev. C. M. Lance, assisted by Rev. James B. Clegg of Greensboro, closed the meeting at Chatham church Friday night.
