CHAUCER and SPENCER were not ashained to acknowledge that they engaged with lively interest in the sweet pastimes of Christmas 'gaudydays,' and, not unfrequently, have they devoted the witchery of their song to their praise.

The divine Milton is recorded to have kept holydays, and in an epistle to his friend Deodati, gives approving countenance to all the merriments of Christmas.

Since the year 500, when the observance of this day became general in the Catholic Church, it has ever been considered a season of joy and congratulation for blessings received, and dangers escaped, during the past year; and from the earliest observations of this day, it has been usual for friends, relations, acquaintances, and lovers, to present gifts of various descriptions, and among these, verses, in the form of compliment or congratulation, formed no inconsiderable part. The learned gentlemen of Lincoln's Inn were great observers of this day, and were accustomed to greet it with 'much merriment and good fellowship.' And if there ever is a time, when we should forget for a moment the stern lessons taught us in the rugged school of hardship and duty, when we should hide from our own thoughtful eye those rough traces made by the wintry storm and torrent of life, in the flow of souls and the warm mingling of social sympathies, it is, when entering upon those divisions of time, that bear so many thousand hopes upon its wings. The greetings and wine cups, the festive board and gay decked hall that mark the departed year, and the entrance of a new one, are not idle ceremonies. They speak to us loudly of the past, and still more impressively of the future, which is the only haven in which man can anchor his little bark of expectations! Here we can stop, and look back upon the dates of each happy event of youth on which we are dependent for many thing yet to be achieved. around as the year is passing and another entering upon its rolling wheels, and see whether it may not be filled up. Spend uot your time in singing dirges to the departed year, but let hope brighten your countenance with its radiant beams. Let your soul be glad with congratulation; and if you have a friend, whose bosom is swelling with merry rejoicings, let it kindle into greater brightness the smilings of your heart. If you have a friend cast down with grief, aid him late firm will please call on Mr. George T. Cooke in driving away despondency, and let the and settle up. beams of your happy face dispel the clouds and childhood, and turn back the eye upon

The dying year should remind us that the blessings of the world are fast fading from our sight, and that the pleasure of the present may not be supplied by the promises of to-morrow.

'Tis true, we have daily testimonials of our rapid flight through time, and of the decay of youth, manhood, and all that is lovely and beautiful. Every setting Sun that paints the hills with his departing rays, reminds us that one less will gladden us with his beams. Every flower that opens its beauties to the brightness of day, and droops and dies when its fragrant sweets are all gone, reminds us of the passing away of all things human; but these lose their force and influence by familiarity.

If the year, just ending, has teemed with blessings to you, rejoice; or, if it has not been so fortunate as you wish, or even if misfortune has oppressed you with its mouruful visitings, what is gained by grieving over time gone, which might have been more fruitful of pleasure? Rejoice and be glad, that another new year is about to dawn upon you, with the cheering beams of hope upon its wings. The merriments of Christmas will waft sounds of sweetest gladness to a thousand ears in the full flush of life, youth, and health. And be ve, who have the power to do it, reminded that every face you con. tribute to set sparkling at Christmas, is a reflection of that goodness of nature which generosity helps to uncloud, as the windows reflect the lustre of the snnny heavens .-Every holly bough and lump of berries with which you adorn your house is a piece of natural piety as well as beauty, and will enable you to relish the green world of which attention, if addressed to you show yourself not forgetful. Every wassail bowl' which you set flowing without drunkenness, every harmless pleasure, every innocent mirth, however mirthful, every forgetfulness even of sorrowful things, when they are only swallowed up in the kindness and joy which it is the end of wisdom to produce, is "Wisest, virtuousest, discretest, best."
