THE YOUNG MEN.

The recent appointments of Messrs. Strange and Ruffin as Solicitors, and Person, as Judge, afford us a text for a brief sermon for the political welfare of the Whigs. These gentlemen are all young men, and they bring to the discharge of their duties energies not crippled or impaired by age, but strong in the full enjoyment of youth. It may be said that they are rather young for the grave positions they occupy, but in this we think there is error. It is a very great mistake to suppose that he only who has passed the meridian of life, or wnose head is venerable with grey hairs, is best qualified to discharge the duties of public office. Yet the Whig party seem to have started on the difficult road to success, fully impressed with the strength of this notion, and resolved apparently to maintain it to the end. Hence, it has become, -shall we speak plainly,-a bed-ridden, old womanly sort of an organization-intensely fund of cobwebs and the dust of age, -devotedly attached to the old ideas with which it started out, dis trustful of change and offering no inducements. holding out no bright hues to the young intel lect of the party to exert itself in the cause .-It would seem almost the settled policy of the Whigs to snub their young men, to keep them back in the shade until they have the warrant Corn is selling in Gallatin, Tenn., at $2.90 to of experience in their venerable heads, and their bodies, at last fitted for the fray, are tottering a long to their speedy grayes. All person indebted to the estate are requestthe support of the cause. Let him labor as he may, let him risk health, fortune and comfort, let him do all that a gallant soldier should do, and what is his reward. Is he promoted? Not he. The old gentleman who has straddled the party for years, like the man of the sea, walks off with the prize. If there are offices of trust or honor, they are bestowed upon the fossil remains, the venerable old Fogies, and our young friend is thrust back that the "Czar refuses to retreat." Cannot our Metropolitan brethren leave for a season and visit Beaufort? They have labored hard in the recent canvass, and their patrons will excuse them for a while. We wish every editor in North Carolina would pay Beautort a visit before the next session of the Legislature. If all would come, and see for themselves, our labors for Beaufort harbor would be much lightened, for such a visit would enlist able: and clearer heads in its advocacy than we can boast of possessing.—Beaufort Intel. DEFICIENCY IN THE REVENUE. We hear whispered about-how truly we know notthat the next Treasurer's report will show a very material deficiency in the revenue of this State, notwithstanding the vauntings of the Standard upon the prosperous condition of our finances under democratic rule. Such a result would by no means surprize us-nor would the organ in the slightest degree blush at being detected in bearing false witness. Bragg is elected, and an exposure of the means by which that end has been secured could do no harm now. Before another election comes on, the organ will find some other straw to tickle the ribs of the unterrified. And after all, it would, perhaps, he rather pleasant than otherwise to find that there is a deficiency in the revenue. Our people love to be taxed. They eschew all participation in the benefits derivable from a distribution of the public lands, and choose to be taxed-for the benefit of democracy.
