

A Faithful Account of the Trip to Raleigh, Including the Discourse before the State.

From the Raleigh Dispatch, June 24, 1867.

I accompanied the President to Rawley. The President does not feel safe to go any where without me to arrange the details and do the nice financial work necessary.

The Rawley trip was the occasion of a serious trouble in the Cabinet. The President was in favor of it. He hesitated, he was assembled by a full persuasion. He had all experienced a most consummation love for his parents, perturbed for them on his father's side.

Seward felt that it was well to go. Fillial love was charmin. Shaker, who was just celebrated as a dramatist as one of our best men.

Randall didn't believe in it at all. He made bold to say that as the dearest Johnson had slept without a corner ston for fifty-five years, he'd manage to get along a while longer.

And he started to get down when Randall whispered something in his left ear. Rise promptly, and draw out his hankercher, the President assumed a look of subdued grief and resumed:

He hadn't taken Grant with him to show him that of he was the most popular in some localities, he had the hearts of the people in others.

There was several incidents which occurred which did not appear in the telegraph. When His Excellency was speaking of himself and remarking that his race was nearly run, a un-regenerated nigger yelled out "Tank de Lord!"

At Rawley General Battles welcomed the President's party and the President responded. He remarked that in Rawley he first opened his tender eyes, a penniless boy.

"Where is the Royaters, and the Smithers, the Brownes, and the Joneses? Where is the long list of men who lived at that day; who lived here when I was a penniless boy, and who, like me, command respect for constancy or devotion?"

He made bold to say that as the dearest Johnson had slept without a corner ston for fifty-five years, he'd manage to get along a while longer. It was rather late in the day.

It was really a tech in taboo. The ancient nigger woman a holding to President's hand, the young quadroons a slinging the boksays; the President with his head bowed, apparently a dream in the days of his boyhood.

There was several incidents which occurred which did not appear in the telegraph. When His Excellency was speaking of himself and remarking that his race was nearly run, a un-regenerated nigger yelled out "Tank de Lord!"

On our return the President was allowed to speak more, for Randall got tired of watching him. We returned in good health, and am in my good spirits. Seward feels well, for he has an abiding faith that the mere show in his own alluz hez an effect for good upon the people, and ez a kinder uv course Secretary Welles thinks so too.

STATISTICS OF THE WHEAT CROP.

Complete returns for the month of June to the statistical division of the agricultural department corroborate and fortify the statements relative to wheat prospects, which we have heretofore given.

The facts indicating the condition of the crop are still more encouraging. The following table shows the average improvement upon last year:

Table showing wheat crop statistics for various states including Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Pennsylvania.

The other states, excepting Texas, make a favorable comparison with last year. It is too early to estimate the final result of the harvest; but with average success in ripening, the crop ought not to be less than 200,000,000 bushels.

The lands in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, once a part of the national territory, have nearly all passed into individual ownership. The unsold lands are divided into ten surveying departments, with sixty-one districts, each one being supplied with a register and receiver.

The lands which have already been surveyed amount to 474,160,551 acres, leaving unsurveyed 991,308,249 acres. During the last fiscal year the sale of the public land amounted to $388,294 acres; the locations for military bounty covered 403,180 acres; and the total quantity taken under the homestead act for actual settlement was 1,892,516 acres.
