THE EXPOSITION.

It appears now that the good people of North Carolina are determined to renounce Jones v. Bobbitt. Error. New trial.

id names. The popular soubriquet by which North Carolina has been for so long time known-the Tar, Pitch and Turpentine, or the same fore-shortened, as the rtists would say, into Tar Heel Statehas been wrested from us, against our consent, and is now getting to be obsolete as it is well known we can no longer maintain our former supremacy in the production of these valuable products. The other name by which we were formerly known, the Rip Van Winkle State, however true it may have been at any past part of the State's history, can now no longer be applied to us, for the famous period of Rip Van Winkle's sleep certainly finds no parallel in the record of industry, and spirit of progress that is now met on every side in North Carolina

The Exposition movement to develop the resources of the State is but fairly commenced, and already some forty counties have caught the spirit of development that will when brought into full play bring of that Bank, but did have certain bonds North Carolina into the fore-front of her on special deposit in said Bank. When these counties shall have all taken official action, together with many others which seem almost sure to do their full part, and when collections shall have been actively commenced of the many things we have to show, the very activity which will be displayed in finding out what our resources really are, will be of great value considered entirely outside of the intrinsic worth of the collections that will be made.

FICKLIN'S NEW ARITHMETICS,

MONTEITH'S

IN TWO BOOKS.

There will be a pardonable pride displayed in endeavoring to show which are the favored portions of North Carolina, and this pride should be fostered by all proper means. North Carolinians when fully trations, the arrangement of the quesaroused have always been equal to every emergency, in war and in peace. An old legend says, that on a certain occasion the following thesis was found tacked on a church door in Germany: "War brings poverty, poverty brings industry, industry the political features. The New Standard brings peace, peace brings plenty, plenty brings pride, and pride brings war." We have had the war with all of its horrors and desolations. We have been brought face to with poverty, and now we are in the transition state to industry in all of its varied forms. Each of the counties of North Carolina should be foremost in developing this spirit of industry, and it is to be hoped that every committee appointed in each county will leave no stone unturned to do anything that may result in permanent good to the people of their section. They should take pains to advise the officers of the Exposition of the names and post-office address of each member of each committee, and should by all means from time to time give advices of the progress of their work. Such information will be of the greatest practical value. We would suggest as a matter of interest that intelligent men in each county will at once make lists of the following items and forward the same to the President of the Exposition in Raleigh, viz: 1. The various kinds of timber and medicinal shrubs and the supply of each, whether abundant or limited

2. The agricultural products.

The different kinds of minerals and probable supply so far as known. 4. The game, fish, birds and animals

5. What things are manufactured in the county. This work may be but a matter of pleas-

A relief force after digging a short distance, discovered the dead bodies of six men, terribly mutilated, their heads, arms, and legs being severed from their bodies. The great majority of the unfortunate victims are colored men.

> Details of a terrible crime and of swift and terrible retribution come from Robertson county, Tenn. Twenty-five miles from Springfield, near the Kentucky line, lived John Martin, his wife, three children, two of them grown young women, the other a boy of 12. Martin was in his seventieth year. The whole family was murdered on last Wednesday night. George French confessed, with a rope round his neck, that he and two negroes had planned the murder. He gave sickening details of the murders. They found $1,200 in money and divided it between them. He had hardly finished his story when he was jerked up and strangled to death. Twenty shots were fired into his body. The mob then made a break for Davis's farm, where the two negroes were found. The mob hanged them to the same tree and shot them while they strangled.

Strong's magnificent abilities to the cause of his clients, as is shown in his untiring and persistent efforts in their behalf, challenges the highest admiration. His unconquerable resolution, even in the face of an irresistible rush of an avalanchian sweep of conviction, reminds one of the attitude of Ajax when braving a thunder-storm and defying the flashing of its lightnings.
